DUNNICHEN WITH LETHAM.

DUNNICHEN parish extends four miles in length, having Forfar on the north-west, Inverarity on the south-west, Re-cobie on the north, and Kirkden on the east. The land, which is nearly all arable, is productive, and has been much improved by the use of manure, artificial manures, and draining. The principal village is LETHAM, situated in the north-east portion of the parish, five miles from Forfar: it is a modern little place, having been erected some years ago on the estate of Mr. Dempster; and thrives by the manufacture of considerable quantities of linen cloth, a branch which gives employment to a large proportion of the inhabitants. Fairs are held on the 26th May (unless that day should fall on a Saturday, when it is held on Monday) and November the 23rd.

POST OFFICE. LETHAM, William Allan, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive every afternoon at two, and are despatched at nine in the morning.

FORFAR

IS a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, the county town, and the capital of the parish of its name; 57 miles N. from Edinburgh, 15 E. from Arbroath, 14 N. from Dundee, 13 S. W. from Brechin, and 5 E. by N. from Glamis; situated in the lowest part of a country sloping towards it on all sides; and on the Aberdeen, and the Scottish Midland railways, for which lines there is a joint station proximate to the town. Forfar is now of pleasant appearance, though strict regularity has by no means been observed in the formation of the streets, which contain many well-built houses and handsome shops. Some years since were erected in Castle-street, at the general expense of the shire, a handsome suite of county buildings. The town-house, which was rebuilt previously, besides the requisite offices, contains a spacious upper room for public meetings and amusements. The inhabitants support an excellently conducted news-room and library, the latter comprising upwards of three thousand volumes. The original charters which constituted Forfar a royal burgh are lost; but the privileges were confirmed in 1669 in virtue of which the burgh is governed by a provost, two bailies, and fifteen councillors, annually elected. A sheriff's court is held for the trial of civil and criminal cases generally; also a burgh court, for the determination of local, civil, and police affairs,—the latter department confided to constables. The burgh unites with Montrose, Brechin, and Arbroath, in sending one member to parliament. The revenue of the burgh, arising from lands, customs, &c., may be averaged at about £1,000 per annum. The chief trade of this town, and of its vicinity, is the weaving of Osnaburghs and other coarse linens; the manufacture of brogues has existed here from time immemorial, and still gives employment to a number of hands; there are several breweries, and these, with the tanning and currying of leather, comprise the other principal establishments of business. There are two or three respectable inns, and the latter number of banking establishments—they are branches respectively of the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland', the 'Western Bank of Scotland', and the 'Dundee Banking Company'.

The places of worship are two churches under the establishment: free, episcopal, and congregational churches, one each, and another for original seceders. There are several public and private schools of repute, for pupils of either sex: the Forfar academy, an excellent institution, commenced its instructive course in 1815—this comprises the usual routine of a liberal English education, and includes among other accomplishments, perfection in the classics, mathematics, the languages, &c. In 1850, a public cemetery was formed; it occupies six scotch acres, on the south side of the town, and is laid out in tasteful walks, with ornamental shrubs, &c., forming a pleasing promenade. On the west side of the town is a fine loch nearly a mile in length by half a mile in breadth; it is a beautiful sheet of water abounding with fish. Upon a small artificial island, near the north end of the loch, anciently stood a nunnery, founded by Queen Margaret as a separate establishment from her husband Malcolm; at the partial drainage of the lake, about seventy years since, for the purpose of obtaining its fertilizing marl, some weapons and instruments were found at the bottom; these were conjectured to have been the implements used by the murderers of Malcolm II, at Glamis, on the ground of a tradition which asserts that the assassins, in attempting to cross the lake upon the ice, went down and perished. The date of the erection of Forfar castle, which stood upon an eminence to the north of the town, cannot be certified: but it is said to have been the place of meeting of the first parliament convened by King Malcolm Canmore, and his occasional seat of residence after the recovery of his throne from Macbeth. The magistrates of the burgh some years since removed the market cross from the street to the site of the old castle, to mark the spot where the monarch sojourned, as but few remains of the edifice are now extant; these, which consist of some fragments of the walls, are visible on the west side of the hill. A castle tower is here erected as an observatory, whence is obtained the best view of the town and surrounding neighbourhood. The 'Picture of Scotland,' and the 'Gazetteer,' as well, furnish many interesting accounts of Forfar, and some amusing traditional anecdotes connected with the town, which we are compelled most reluctantly to exclude from our pages. The Rev. John Bruce, the intelligent author of the 'Statistical Account of the Parish of Forfar,' furnishes a number of particulars illustrative of the rise of the town, its tastes, and appearances. He says that about the middle of the last century there were not above seven tea-kettles, seven pairs of bellows, and as many watches in Forfar; now (in 1793), he adds, every house in the town has a tea-kettle and bellows, and every menial servant must have his watch. At the same not distant period an ox, valued at forty shillings, supplied the flesh market of Forfar for a fortnight. The steady advancement of population, trade, and agricultural improvements, both before and since 1793, when this gentleman wrote, have in this district, as elsewhere, revolutionized the price and consumption of articles, and now Forfar is one of the most thriving and comfortable towns in the county. The market is held on Saturday; and the fairs on the last Wednesday in January, the first Wednesday in May (old style) June 26th, the first Tuesday in July and August, the last Wednesday in September, October 29th, and the first Wednesday in November.

POST OFFICE. High-street, John Thomson, Post Master.—Letters from parts NORTH and SOUTH arrive every morning at ten minutes before eight, and evening at twenty minutes past five, and are despatched at five minutes past five in the morning, and at a quarter-before two afternoon.

FRIOCKHEIM, ARBIRLOT, CARMYLIE, GUTHRIE,

INVERKEILOR, KINNEL, KIRKDEN, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

FRIOCKHEIM is a modern village, partly in the parish of Guthrie, and partly in that of Kinnel, six miles from Arbroath, situate on the right bank of the Lunan, and near the line of the Aberdeen railway. It owes its origin to Mr. Anderson, who laid out the ground on a regular plan, and feued it into small lots, in order to encourage the settlement of weavers, &c.; and by far the greater proportion of the inhabitants are employed by this gentleman in the spinning of flax and weaving of linen cloth; the spinning mill, and the buildings connected with Mr. A.'s works, are lighted with gas. Altogether the situation of this place is peculiarly eligible for the seat of manufactures, being nearly equi-distant from most of the towns in the county, and in the immediate vicinity of a railway. In 1835 upwards of £700 was collected by public subscription, and the proceeds applied to the erection of a handsome chapel, in connexion with the established church. There are several good schools in the village and its vicinity, in which are taught the ordinary branches of education. There is no municipal government, the hitherto exemplary conduct and contented habits of the inhabitants rendering such description of superintendence unnecessary, and until lately there was no resident police officer.

ARBIRLOT parish is contiguous to that of St. Vigean's at Arbroath, on the north, and bounded on the south-east by the German ocean, extending four miles in length by three in breadth. The village stands on the east bank of the Elliot stream, from whence the name is derived, which was formerly Aber-eliot. Along the sea coast the land is sandy; inland the soil is a rich loam, capable of producing various crops. About a quarter of a mile south-east of the village stand the remains of Kelley castle, an ancient ruin supposed originally to belong to the family of Auchterlony, one of the ancestors of whom burned the Abbey of Arbroath. Arbirlot contains a parish library, a savings' bank, and a parochial school.

CARMYLIE is four miles in length by three in breadth. The parish is hilly, and contains much land that is unproductive; but there are considerable quarries, from which good pavement stones are obtained, and exported in great quantities. The small river Elliot runs through the whole length of the parish.

GUTHRIE parish is divided into two parts, lying nearly six miles asunder from each other. The land slopes from the hill of Guthrie to the south and south-east, a part only being arable. Prior to the reformation this parish had a collegiate church, with a provost and three prebendaries. The patronage of the parish belongs to the family of Guthrie, one of whom was slain at the battle of Flodden. There is a parochial school in the parish.

The parish of INVERKEILOR presents a front of five miles to the sea at Lunan bay, near which, on an eminence, at the mouth of the Lunan river, stands an old venerable ruin, named 'Red Castle,' which is said to have been built by William the Lion, and used by him as a hunting seat. The parish church stands inland, on the Lunan water, at the distance of seven miles from Arbroath, and six from Montrose. The Keilor rivulet runs through the parish to the sea; and the small fishing village of Ethiehaven is situated at the mouth of that river. There are some other hamlets in the parish and several fine seats, particularly 'Ethie House,' the seat of the Earl of Northesk; about a mile from which, eastward, near the sea, stand the remains of St. Murdoch's chapel, at one time a cell of Aberbrothock; and a short way to the south is the promontory of Redhead.

KINNEL parish lies on the north side of the Lunan, upon which stream are several flax spinning mills; and the church stands on the bank of the river, at the distance of six miles from Arbroath. The parish extends about four miles in length, by three in breadth, and is separated from the sea by Lunan parish. The surface of this district is mostly flat, and in a good state of cultivation; and there are some plantations in a thriving condition. Within the parish are several tumuli; and tradition points out the spot where a battle was fought between the rival clans of Lindsay and Ogilvie, in the year 1443.

The parish of KIRKDEEN is four miles long and two broad, and is watered by the Lunan (on which are some spinning mills), and one of its tributaries, the Vinny. A large patch of Dunnichen parish lies in the centre of that of Kirkden, which latter is tolerably fertile, and the lands well enclosed and planted. In this district are some remains of antiquity, including an obelisk, bearing some rude characters, the meaning of which cannot now be deciphered.

GLAMMIS AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

GLAMMIS is a rich and fertile parish—the village a small one is 13 miles N. from Dundee, 12 N. E. from Coupar Angus, 5 s. w. from Forfar, and the same distance s. from Kirriemuir; situated in the vale of Strathmore, which is watered by the river Dean, and is one of the best enclosed, drained, and farmed districts in Scotland. The only object of interest in this neighbourhood is Glammis Castle, which stands in a park near the village. This is an edifice of princely and antique appearance, consisting of an irregular congregation of tall towers, some of which are of remoter date than others. It was anciently a royal residence, and the scene of the death of Malcolm II, in 1034: it afterwards became the property of Macbeth, after whose death it fell to the crown. Robert II gave it to John Lyon, his favourite, who on marrying the king's second daughter, became the founder of the present noble family of Strathmore; and the eldest son of the Earl bears the title of Lord Glammis. On the conviction and execution of the young and beautiful Lady Glammis for witchcraft, in 1537, the castle once more became royal property, and was a residence of James V, but it was afterwards restored to the family. It contains an extensive and valuable museum of curiosities, old armour, and a collection of pictures. Near the castle stands a remarkable curiosity, namely a great number of dials, thus disposed,—on a pedestal stand the figures of four lions rampant, as large as life, each holding a dial in their fore paws, facing the four cardinal point: from their heads rises a high mass of stone, something like a pine-apple in shape, with the protuberances upon it formed into dials, making the number of these ancient time-pieces eighty-four. The castle, with its museum, pedestal, &c. forms the chief attraction to tourists in the country of Forfar, and is well worthy of minute inspection. The inhabitants of Glammis are principally employed in the weaving of linen fabrics. Two societies are established here, namely, the Gardeners' and the Freemasons', who hold their meetings in a neat building erected for the purpose, which is also used for other meetings when required. Fairs are held on the first Wednesday in May and the first Wednesday after the 22nd of November, (both new style); also on the Wednesday after Whitsunday, (old style); and two others more recently established held respectively in April and July.

KIRRIEMUIR AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

KIRRIEMUIR is a large town, one of considerable antiquity, a burgh of barony, and capital of its parish, 62 miles N. from Edinburgh, 18 N. from Dundee 6 N. W. from Forfar, and 5 N. from Glamis, situated near the foot of the braes of Angus, on the south-west side of a hill, along the northern brow of a beautiful glen, through which flows the small rivulet Gairie. The prospect from the lower part of the town is bounded by the southern braes of the glen, but from the higher part almost the whole of the delightful vale of Strathmore is brought into view. The town consists of several streets, diverging from each other—fancifully described as resembling the shaft and arms of an anchor; its appearance has been much improved of late years. For a long period Kirriemuir has been the thriving seat of considerable manufactures, comprising about twenty varieties of linen: it is celebrated for the excellent fabric of its cloth, and the ingenuity and industry of those employed in producing it; some idea may be formed of the importance of this trade from the fact that the looms of Kirriemuir have furnished, in one year, upwards of one hundred thousand pieces, varying in length from one hundred to one hundred and seventy yards, giving employment to more than two thousand weavers.

The date of the barony of Kirriemuir is at the present day, unknown, and it is only certain that the jurisdiction of its baillie once extended over a large tract of country; Lord Douglas, who is superior of the burgh, appoints the baillie. A body of constables is appointed annually; there is a superintendent of police; and a sheriff's court is held six times a year, for the recovery of small debts.

LOCHEE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

LOCHEE is a thriving village, in the united parish of Liff and Benvie, one mile and a half west from Dundee; very agreeably situated in a well cultivated and planted country. Numerous flax mills and linen manufactories, together with several extensive stone quarries, give employment to a large number of hands.

There is a very neat chapel, surmounted by a lofty spire, which is in connexion with the above-named parish; also a free church and one for the united presbyterians: and there are likewise several schools, including one for children of catholic parents, in which the higher branches of education are cultivated.

POST OFFICE, Main-street, LOCHEE. William Craig, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive every morning at half-past six, and evening at half-past five; and are despatched every afternoon at two, and night at half-past nine.

MONTROSE

AND NEIGHBOURHOOD, WITH THE PARISHES OF CRAIG, DUN, AND MARYTON.

MONTROSE is a royal burgh and sea-port, and the capital of its parish, and a branch station of the Aberdeen railway, 72 miles N.E. from Edinburgh, 29 N.E. from Dundee, 23 S.S.W. from Stonehaven, 21 E. by N. from Forfar, 13 S.S.W. from Inverbervie, 12 S. from Arbroath, and 8 E. from Brechin. The German Ocean the rivers North and South Esk, and a large expanse of water designated the 'ba-in of Montrose,' so nearly encompass the town, as to constitute its site a peninsula. It was anciently called Celurea: but the derivation of its modern appellation, Montrose, has been controverted by etymologists: Camden derives the name from the Latin Mons Rosarum, the 'Mount of Roses,' which is countenanced by the seal of the town bearing the ornament of roses, with the motto Mare ditat, Rosa decorat—the sea enriches, and the rose adorns. Montrose is connected with many important events in Scottish history; it is mentioned as the port from which Sir James Douglas embarked in 1330, with a numerous and splendid retinue, on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, carrying along with him the heart of Robert Bruce; it is distinguished as the first place in Scotland where the Greek language was taught, and as having sent forth from its seminary the celebrated scholar Andrew Melville; it was the birth-place of the warlike Marquess of Montrose, and the house in which he was born was occupied as an inn, not many years ago. Montrose bestows the title of duke upon the chief of the family of Graham. This was the first port made by the French fleet, in December, 1715, with the Chevalier on board; and that prince embarked at the same place in the month of February of the following year.

The High-street of Montrose is of great width, and the houses lofty, many having their gables toward the street, gives the town an ancient aspect, and not only are the main streets strikingly clean, but the secondary ones also are neat and gas-lighted. About the centre of Main-street is the town house, a neat plain building of two stories, with an arcade below, beneath which the post office is situated. The South Esk is crossed by a magnificent suspension bridge, on the precise site of the former wooden one, the foundation stone of the masonry was laid in September, 1828, and the bridge declared opened in December, 1829; it was designed by Captain Brown, R.N., patentee, and finished at an expense of upwards of £20,000; it stretches across the river in a noble span—the distance between the points of suspension being four hundred and thirty-two feet, and together with its approaches the structure extends eight hundred feet; it forms a roadway of twenty-six feet in breadth, having a foot-path raised off: this structure is a great ornament to the town, and Bridge-street forms a very handsome approach to it. The river at the bridge is very deep, having thirty-five feet water at spring tides, and twenty feet at low water in ordinary tides; and so rapid that during ebb it frequently runs at the rate of six miles an hour. The harbour is formed by the river and an arm of the sea—is very commodious, and a safe asylum for vessels in tempestuous weather.

Two light-houses have been erected at a very great expense; they are a most valuable improvement, as they enable ships to enter the port in the darkest nights: a larger house, in which the keeper of the lights resides, is provided with accommodation for the reception and recovery of persons who have suffered shipwreck; and attached to this praiseworthy establishment is a life-boat. The quays in the harbour are very judiciously planned—built in a most substantial manner, and there is a wet dock and a patent slip. The port has a custom-house belonging to it, which comprehends within its bounds the coast from the lights of Tay on the south, to Bervie-brow or the Tod-head on the north. The shipping trade includes corn, timber, coal, and cured fish. The number of vessels belonging to the port in 1850 was one hundred and thirteen, and the amount of tonnage 14,750. The principal manufactures of Montrose comprise flax spinning, linen yarns, sheetings, and sail-cloth, which are carried on extensively; but there are various other branches of trading industry of considerable importance, among which may be enumerated rope and sail-making, ship-building, iron founding, tanning, and two starch manufactories. There are five branch banks, and a savings' bank—the latter with government security. Several commodious inns afford the necessary accommodation to visitors—the principal are the 'Star,' the 'Albion,' and the 'White Horse.' The Downos or Links are situated between the town and the sea, and are the most extensive of any in Scotland, comprehending a circuit of several miles, finely formed by nature for the favourite and healthful Scots' game of golf, which is here greatly practised: the railway passing through the Links has a little curtailed their dimensions. Montrose has its theatre, assembly rooms, and other places of amusement; and numerous institutions, charitable, educational, scientific and social, also a suite of commodious baths. Two admirably conducted newspapers issue weekly from the Montrose press—the 'Review,' on the liberal side in politics, and the 'Standard' on the conservative.

The erection of Montrose into a royal burgh has generally been referred to the year 1352, in the reign of David II; but there is good reason for believing that the first charter emanated from David I. The municipal government is vested in a town-council, consisting of nineteen persons, including a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and the master of the hospital; of which nineteen, fifteen must be resident guild brethren, and four resident craftsmen, including the convenor for the time. The town is protected by a body of police, under the superintendence of commissioners. A burgh or baillie court is held every Thursday in the court-room; a justice of peace court on the first Monday of every month, and a sheriff's court on the third Friday in the months of January, March, May, July, and September—the two last-mentioned courts are for adjudicating small-debt claims. The burgh is united with those of Forfar, Brechin, Arbroath, and Inverbervie, in returning a representative to parliament.

The parish church is a large building, elegantly finished, measuring ninety-eight feet long by sixty-five over walls: the lofty steeple is a conspicuous object to a great distance. There are two handsome free churches, and two episcopal chapels; and various other places of worship exist in the town, for which see the end of the Directory. The public charities of Montrose are very numerous, among these are the Ancient Hospital of Montrose, under the guardianship of the town; the Royal Lunatic Asylum, incorporated by royal charter in 1810; an infirmary and dispensary, and Dorward's House of Refuge, all of which occupy capacious and ornamental structures. The academy, situated on the Links, is a handsome erection, surmounted by a neat dome; the establishment comprises a rector, and six or seven teachers in the various branches of mathematics, the Greek, Latin, and modern languages, writing and arithmetic, English grammar, drawing, &c. Many other educational establishments are supported; and the numerous societies both religious and benevolent maintained in the town, are highly creditable to the munificence of its residents. Several libraries and reading-rooms are supported, and an interesting museum is contained in a very tasteful building, in Panmure place. The market is on Friday; and great hiring fairs are held on the Fridays next after Whit-Sunday and Martinmas (old style.)

CRAIG parish occupies the peninsular corner of land between the sea and the basin of Montrose. The islet called Loch Brechin, in the neck of water connecting the basin with the sea, belongs to the parish; and there are also within its limits the two small fishing villages of USAN and FERRYDEN. The land is generally arable, and beneath the surface nature has deposited abundance of limestone.

The parish of DUN lies between Montrose and Brechin, on the North bank of the South Esk; the land is generally fertile, and the surface for the most part level. With in the parish is a small lake, called Don's Dish.

MARYTOWN (or Maryton) is a parish, lying on the south side of the South Esk, and the west side of the Basin of Montrose, bounded by Craig parish (before-mentioned) on the south. The land is arable and well cultivated, and the parish derives considerable advantage from its proximity to the town of Montrose.

NEWTYLE

IS a parish and village—the latter situated on the road from Dundee to Meikle (in Perthshire), 11 miles north-east from the former town, and somewhat above two north from the latter. It is a station on the Dundee and Newtyle railway. The neighbourhood presents inducements to manufacturers from Dundee and other towns to establish works in this district, land being comparatively cheap and wages low; the locality of Newtyle is likewise considered most eligible as a depot for grain and other agricultural produce.
The inhabitants of the village are almost exclusively occupied in weaving; the articles produced from the loom are chiefly coarse cloths used for packing. The places of worship are established, free, and secession churches—one of each, and there are schools connected with the two former. The parish, which lies in the south-west part of the county, extends two miles in length by one and three quarters in breadth, including a portion of the Sidlaw hills, from which the lands decline into the rich flat exposure of Strathmore.

Near the village are the remains of the castle of Hatton, built by Lawrence Lord Oliphant, in the year 1575;
and contiguous to these ruins some vestiges are visible of the still more ancient castle of Balcraig.

HADDINGTONSHIRE,

OR EAST LOTHIAN, lies in the south-eastern part of Scotland; bounded on the north by the Frith of Forth, on the east by that strait and also by the North Sea, on the south by Berwickshire, and on the west by Edinburghshire, or Mid Lothian; from east to west it extends twenty-five miles; from north to south, at the middle, sixteen—at the east end it is not more than ten miles across, and at the west end about twelve: its surface presents an area of about two hundred and seventy-two square miles, or 174,680 statute acres.

The EARLY HISTORY of this county is so intimately connected with that of Edinburgh as to render unnecessary a lengthened recurrence to this subject. The Saxons denominated the whole country, lying along the sea and the forth, Lothian; afterwards it was divided into three parts, called, from their relative situation to each other, East Lothian, Mid Lothian, and West Lothian. In 1020 this district, with other parts of the Lothians, was ceded to Malcolm II. In succeeding centuries the shire suffered the horrors of pillage and conflagration, on all occasions of the armies of England being sent to invade the country, or to molest or punish the capital. In 1296, and again in 1650, the sanguinary battles of Dunbar were fought within the county; and in the critical year of 1745 it was the scene of the conflict at Prestonpans—since which period it has enjoyed almost uninterrupted repose and tranquillity.

SOIL AND SURFACE, PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—In point of soil, cultivation and produce, this county holds the first rank in Scotland; and in some of these respects, particularly the mode of husbandry, it will bear a comparison with the most favoured districts of England. The greatest elevations in East Lothian, above the level of the sea, are Traprain Law, 700 feet; North Berwick Law, 940; and Shartleton Hill, 1,615. During the reigns of David I., Malcolm IV. and William the Lion, the acreage of this county was in the possession of only a few barons, who, at their pleasure, disposed of not only the lands, but the men who lived upon them, without hindrance. In these times the kings, the nobles, and the churchmen were all tillers of the soil; and in this district every manor had its hamlet, its church, its mill, its kiln, and its brewhouse. The monks, indeed, were indefatigable husbandmen, and by their labour and skill gave the county its first character for agriculture. In this point of view, it may be divided into four districts. The first is a sloping tract of land, with a fertile soil. The second is a ride of ground north of the Tyne, descending partly towards that river, and partly towards the coast-land; it comprehends a great proportion of the arable land of the county. The third consists of a tract varying in breadth, elevated above the midlands, and continuing along the base of the mountains nearly the whole extent of the county. The fourth comprises an extensive range of mountains, which commences at the south-west extremity of the shire, and terminates in a high promontory called St. Abb's Head; the greater part of this is moor, but some spots between the hills are kept under a regular rotation of crops. Having nearly two sides begirt by the sea, the county derives a great part of its beauty and opulence from this circumstance. So commodiously has nature disposed the surface of East Lothian into ranges of hills and fertile dales, that some tourists, from topographical retrospection, have declared Haddingtonshire to be the Northampton of Great Britain. Excellent gardens and orchards flourished in the county as early as the twelfth century; and pulse seems to have been cultivated here in the thirteenth—the latter circumstance is attested by the fact of the English soldiers, during their siege of Drileton castle, having subsisted on the pease which grew in the adjacent fields. The thriving state of the agriculture of the county, in the fourteenth century, is noticed by Fordun. He says, in 1336 East Lothian was embroiled in warfare, and its field operations impeded by the outrage committed by Alan of Wyntown, in carrying off, by violence, one of the daughters of the Earl of Seton; and he adds, that so great was the ferment upon this occasion, that the labour of a hundred ploughs was suspended during a whole year. The fertility of East Lothian in the seventeenth century is ascertained by a passage in 'Whitelock's Memoirs,' where it is stated that the soldiers who accompanied Cromwell in his expedition into Scotland, in 1650, were astonished to find in that district 'the greatest plenty of corn they ever saw, not one of the fields being fallow.' But it is since the period of the union that, in this district particularly, agricultural improvements have manifested themselves extensively and beneficially, and called forth the exertions and science of spirited individuals, proprietors of the soil: these have introduced the best systems of husbandry, and employed the most approved implements and machines—have drained and planted and enclosed, until East Lothian has become one of the most beautiful and productive shires in North Britain. The application of steam power here, to the laborious operations of threshing, &c., present to the eye the aspect of a manufacturing district, from the number of tall chimnies which rise in every direction. Exclusive of farming, which is the chief pursuit of the inhabitants, many on the coast are employed in fishing, fish-curing, salt-making, and commercial occupations; but manufactures are not extensive in any part of the county: linen and woollen manufactories once existed, but have been long discontinued; the principal articles now exported from East Lothian are corn, whisky, ale, porter, coal, earthenware, soap and fish. The west of the shire abounds with coal; besides which, limestone and red granite constitute the chief mineral substances.

RIVERS, &c.—Several streams intersect the county, but none of them merit the title of river except the Tyne, which, passing Haddington, falls into the sea at Tynninghame, where it forms a bay. The shire is destitute of natural lakes, but this deficiency seems no way injurious to the district, and is amply made up by the Frith of Forth, which yields a large supply of fish.

Haddingtonshire comprises twenty-three complete parishes and two parts of parishes, and three royal burghs—Haddington, Dunbar and North Berwick: these join with Lauder (in Berwickshire), and Jedburgh (in Roxburghshire), in sending one member to parliament, and the county at large returns another.

TOTAL POPULATION OF HADDINGTONSHIRE..... 30095 31164 35226 36242 35959

Note.—(a) Fala parish is mostly in Edinburghshire; the entire parish contains 249 inhabitants.

(b) The parish of Oldhamstocks is partly in Berwickshire, but the whole is entered here.

The total annual value of Real Property, in Haddingtonshire, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £251,126; and the amount assessed to the Property Tax, in 1843, was £246,153 12s. 9d.

ABERLADY AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

THE parish of Aberlady lies on the south coast of the mouth of the Firth of Forth; it is very fertile, and contains an area of six square miles: it is bounded on the south by Gladsnuir and Haddington, and on the east also by the latter parish and Dirleton. The beach here presents such facilities for the disembarkation of an invading force, that in the course of the last war, when Britain was menaced with invasion by France, serious apprehensions were entertained, in all the southern districts of Scotland, that the enterprising Bonaparte might have thought proper to select it as one of the chief points of attack, in order to divide the operations of the British. The village is situated 15 miles w. from Edinburgh,  $5\frac{1}{2}$  w. n.w. from Haddington, and  $4\frac{1}{2}$  s. from Dirleton, at the head of a long flat sandy beach, and at the mouth of the small river Peff. James VI. by charter erected this parish into a temporal barony, which grant it was said was confirmed by Charles, in 1633, but the privileges or immunities conferred thereby are not manifest in the present day. The Earl of Wemyss and March is patron of the parish; the seat of this nobleman, Gosford House, stands nearly a mile south west of the village. The edifice, which is surrounded by beautiful enclosed grounds, contains a valuable collection of rare paintings, which are shewn in a liberal and courteous manner to visitors. About a mile from Aberlady, on the north-east, is Luffness House, a mansion belonging to Sir Alexander Hope, built in 1549, as a fortification by the French general, de Thermes, for the purpose of awing the garrison of Haddington, then in the possession of the English. The parish church is a neat structure, and the parochial school is a well-conducted institution.

THIS parish lies on the north-east boundary of Haddington, and is separated on the north by Dirleton, from the mouth of the Forth; and the small village lies within  $5\frac{1}{2}$  miles s. from North Berwick, 5 s. e. from Aberlady, and 3 n. e. from Haddington. It contains a neat and modern church, a parochial school, and a brewery. This parish possesses considerable interest from the circumstance of having for its ministers successively, in the early part of the last century, two men of eminent poetical genius.—Blair, author of 'The Grave,' and Home, the author of 'Douglas.' DIRLETON, WITH GULANE, FENTON, KINGSTON,*AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DIRLETON, one of the nearest rural villages in this county, and perhaps in Scotland, is 20 miles E.N.E. from Edinburgh, 7 N. from Haddington, 4½ N. E. from Aberlady, and nearly three W. from North Berwick; charmingly seated at the head of a low meadow, extending about a mile and a half towards the sea—the houses, which for the most part are built in a plain, neat, Gothic style, having tastefully arranged gardens, nearly surrounded an extensive triangular green, interspersed with trees. On the south side of this space stands the venerable and magnificent ruin of Dirleton Castle, embosomed among evergreens, and its massive towers richly clothed with ivy. The origin of this castle is lost in the darkness of the middle ages—it is ascertained, however, to have belonged to a noble family. In the nineteenth century, named DeVallebus or De Vaux, from whom it was taken after a tedious siege, by Edward I, in 1298. In 1650 it was reduced and dismantled by the parliamentary general, Lambert. About the middle of the fifteenth century, this castle and the estate bestowed the title of Earl of Dirleton on the Hayburton family.

From ancient documents, it would appear, that a collegiate church was founded here in 1444, by Sir Walter Hayburton; but little is known of its character, or site. The present parish church, which stands a little below the green, is a handsome modern erection, bearing date 1661, and considerably enlarged in 1825—it has a substantial square tower. The parish school stands near the church. About half a mile north-west from the village is Archibald House, the handsome mansion of Mrs. Ferguson, the exemplary and liberal patroness of the place, and proprietrix of the estate by descent. The parish, which extends about six miles in length, by four and a half in breadth, is low, and with the exception of a sandy stripe along the shore, which is used as a rabbit warren, is fertile to a degree not surpassed by any district in East Lothian, yielding excellent green crops and pasture. Besides Dirleton, the parish contains three other villages, namely—GULANE, FENTON, and KINGSTON.

GULANE, or Goolan, is a small but respectable village of rather ancient aspect, two miles south-west from Dirleton. At one time this was the capital of the parish to which it gave its name; but in 1612 the seat of worship was removed, by act of parliament, to Dirleton, and at the same time changing the name of the parish to its present appellation. On the east side of the Links, stand the ruin of the ancient kirk, which was dedicated to St. Andrew, and was well endowed. It is mentioned by Grose, that the last vicar of the church of Gulane, before its abandonment, was deprived of his living by James VI, for no other misdemeanour than that of smoking tobacco, a custom which the king, it is said, held in abhorrence. On the small bleak island of Fidra, lying off this coast, was an ecclesiastical structure, which served the purpose of a lazaretto in times of severe plague; and its widows acted as beacons to the mariner at night, in warning him of the dangers of an unsafe shore. The Links in the vicinity of Gulane are the habitation of vast numbers of rabbits, and are famed as a warren at a considerable rent; the markets of Edinburgh are supplied with great quantities annually from the burrows here. The downs of this neighbourhood have been long celebrated for rearing and training race or fine riding horses.

DUNBAR,*WITH BELHAVEN, EAST-BARNS, WEST-BARNS, SPOTT AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

DUNBAR is a royal burgh and sea-port, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of its parish and of the eastern part of the district of East Lothian; 28 miles E. from Edinburgh, 11 E. from Haddington, and 30 N.W. from Berwick-upon-Tweed; occupying a slightly elevated piece of ground on the shore of the North Sea, and the North British railway passes on the south side of the town, where there is a handsome station. Dunbar, at a very early period, was considered a place of strength and commercial importance; but there was no harbour, until Oliver Cromwell, by a grant of £300, began or promoted the construction of one, which now forms the east pier of the present harbour; in 1820 it was improved, with the addition of a good dry and graving dock. About six years ago, a new harbour, called by permission of her Majesty 'Victoria harbour,' was built at the joint expense of the town and fishery board. It occupies a space of about five acres, and affords ample accommodation to the vessels and boats frequenting Dunbar for fishery purposes. On the west side of the harbour, and within high-water mark, stand the venerable ruins of a castle, which in former ages must have been very extensive and formidable; it is based upon rocks, but the date of its erection cannot be conjectured: it was always considered a station of great defensive consequence, as a key to Scotland on the east border; and it has been often besieged, and as often bravely defended. In this castle Edward II. took refuge, after his defeat at Bannockburn; and to this secure asylum Bothwell fled, and left the unfortunate Mary in the hands of the associated lords, after the disastrous rencounter at Carberry-hill: it was subsequently demolished by order of the Scottish parliament, and nothing but the dilapidated fragments of this once almost impregnable fortress are now visible, and these have been much reduced by the excavations for Victoria harbour. On a columnar rocky projection, between these ruins and the harbour, was the battery; this has been abandoned by government, and it is now used as a storehouse.

The town is built upon a gentle rise from the beach; the principal street is wide and spacious, and the chief thoroughfares are macadamized; the streets and best class of shops are lighted with gas; and a good supply of soft water is conveyed to the town, from a distance of two miles, by means of pipes. In High-street is an establishment belonging to the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland,' and several insurance agency offices, and there is being built, on a prominent site at the south end, a handsome place of worship in connexion with the free church of Scotland. In Westport-street is a branch of the 'British Linen Company's Bank,' and at the shore is a custom-house. The houses are generally large and of pleasing exterior, and few towns present to the stranger a more agreeable and respectable appearance. A number of persons from Edinburgh and that neighbourhood, during the bathing seasons, take lodgings in the town. The water is very strong, and the walks about the town are pleasant and invigorating to the invalid. Dunbar House, the mansion of the Earl of Lauderdale, stands at the northern end of the main street; its grand front faces the sea, and consists of two extensive wings, with a circular centre, forming an elegant elevated portico, supported by handsome corresponding pillars; on the top of the centre, at the back of the edifice and facing the street, is a finely executed large proportioned figure of that ideal animal the sphynx, in a couchant position, and the wings erect: the house is now unoccupied.

The herring fishery has long been a very considerable source of wealth to Dunbar. Frequently five hundred boats are at the station, and since the opening of the railway large quantities are sent, in a green state, to the inland counties—sometimes to the extent of two to three hundred tons a day. A great weight is also cured into white or red herrings, and are then exported to the Baltic, the Mediterranean, the West Indies, and to Ireland; as many as ten thousand barrels have been cured here in one season. Cod-fishing is likewise a profitable pursuit here; the produce is mostly despatched to meet the London demand; and Edinburgh is also a market for white fish, lobsters, &c. in great supply from this port. Besides the fishing craft, there are nine vessels belonging to the port, of the aggregate burthen of six hundred tons and upwards. The district around Dunbar is one of the richest and best cultivated in Scotland, and produces a much greater supply than is required by the inhabitants. The chief exports are corn and fish, and the imports coal and timber. The manufactures of Dunbar were at one period numerous and extensive: the most important branches now in operation are those of iron founding, for which there are two establishments of ship building, for which there is one dock—and of fish-curing, comprising four extensive concerns, three large breweries, and a rope and sail yard. The domestic trade furnishes all the necessary articles of life, and the shops exhibit a respectable display of useful and fashionable productions. Dunbar was elevated to the rank of a royal burgh by David II. and its burghal privileges were confirmed and extended by James IV. and James VI: it is governed by a provost and three bailies, a treasurer, town clerk and chamberlain, with fifteen members of council. A bill intended to be brought into parliament, for reducing the number of the municipal corporations in Scotland, will limit the number of corporate officers in Dunbar to a provost, two bailies, and nine councillors. This burgh joins with Jedburgh, Lauder, Haddington, and North Berwick, in returning one member to parliament.

At the southern end of the High-street stands the elegant parish church, the erection of which commenced (on the site of the old kirk) in the summer of the year 1819, and it was opened on the 16th of September, 1821: its architectural style is the modern Gothic, and the body of the edifice is very commodious, containing eighteen hundred sittings; a very handsome square tower, with a pinnacle at each corner, embellishes the structure: the entire of the building is of a rather dark red stone, not unlike brick when seen at a distance; but the quality of the material is considered of superior excellence and durability: the completion of the fabric cost upwards of £8,000. The interior is enriched with a beautiful marble monument to the memory of George Home, lord high treasurer of Scotland in the reign of James VI; the height of this fine memorial is twenty-six feet, and its breadth twelve: while the church was rebuilding, the most judicious care was taken not to injure or disturb what is deemed the finest piece of tomb sculpture in Scotland. The seceders have two places of worship here, the wesleyan methodists and baptists each one, and the free church congregation, at present occupying the church at Belhaven, will shortly remove into their elegant new church already mentioned. The town has the advantage of a good grammar-school, wherein all the useful branches of education are taught: a commodious new building was erected in 1823 (on the beach, near the church), consisting of two wings, with a house for the master in the centre; it is an addition of great utility and convenience to this excellent establishment. There are several other excellent private schools in town, one under the management of the free church. Other institutions, belonging to the burgh and parish, of a praiseworthy nature, are well sustained—amongst these are a mechanics' institute, the Dunbar parochial school (situate at West Barns), and charity and infants' schools, for children of either sex, of the humblest class.

The country about Dunbar is exceedingly pleasant; and the prospects from the high grounds, which rise gradually from the sea-coast, are expansive, and present a variety of delightful objects: the most striking of these are the North Berwick Law and Tantallan Castle, the Bass, the Isle of May, the Frith of Forth, and the mountains of Angus. The parish of Dunbar extends about eight miles along the coast; the soil is rich and dry, and produces all kinds of crops as early as any in Scotland. The market, a bulk one, is held on Tuesday, the grain is all weighed, and delivered immediately on being sold. There are two annual fairs—one on the first Tuesday after the 26th of May, the other on the first Tuesday after the 22nd of November.

BELHAVEN is a remarkably neat village, included within the jurisdiction of the burgh of Dunbar, situated about a mile west from that town, at the head of a small bay of the sea, which in former times formed a good harbour. It gives the title of lord to a branch of the family of Hamilton. A large brewery is established here.

EAST BARNs is a village in Dunbar parish, about three miles south-east from that town, and a little to the right of the road leading thence to Berwick. In this village there is a school for the eastern district of the parish.

WEST BARNs, another part of the royalty of Dunbar, is about half a mile west from Belhaven. In this village, on the river Biel, are established the town's extensive corn and flour mills; there is also a brewery, and a manufactory for agricultural implements. Here also is the parochial school of Dunbar, an excellently conducted and numerous attended institution.

SPOTT is a small rural village in the parish of that name, situated two miles south from Dunbar. The parish is of an irregular figure, being about five miles in length by two in breadth; the low country is well enclosed and cultivated, and the higher grounds afford good pasture. Spot House, in this parish, is romantically perched upon a rock, rising from a low glen, surrounded with beautiful pleasure grounds. In this neighbourhood was fought, on the 3rd of September, 1650, the battle of Down-hill (so decisively unfortunate to the royal cause), in which the Scotch forces were totally routed by Cromwell.

FALA AND SOUTRA, WITH HUMBIE.

FALA and SOUTRA, an united parish; the first of which is within the eastern border of Edinburghshire, the other in the county of Haddington. The villages of Fala and Fala-Dam are situated on the road from Edinburgh to Lauder, about 14 miles from the former, and 11 from Haddington. The parish comprehends part of the Lammermoor ridge, of which Soutra hill is the north-west point. From the foot of the hill the surface is nearly level, having a tolerably fertile soil; and the lands are in a high state of cultivation. The kirk of Fala stands on an eminence over-hanging the road.

The parish of HUMBIE lies in the south-western part of Haddingtonshire; is bounded by Saltón and Ormiston on the north, part of Bolton and Gifford on the east, and Fala and Soutra on the west. It is five miles in length, by rather more than three in breadth, lying chiefly on the Lammermoor range of hills near Berwickshire. The high lands are pastoral, but the low grounds are well enclosed and cultivated. Ironstone and coal are said to lie beneath the surface of some parts, but neither has been wrought. A church of the establishment, a free church and a parochial school are in the parish.

THIS, an united parish, is bounded by Morham and Whittingham on the north and east, and by Gifford on the west; extending from near the centre of the county southward, among the Lammermoor hills, to the borders of Berwickshire. Within the parish are fine arable lands and also sheep walks; and the district contains a number of remains of antiquity.
Among the latter are the ruins of Nunraw, a nunnery

GIFFORD AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

GIFFORD is a respectable and thriving village, and the capital of the parish of Yester, 20 miles E.S.E. from Edinburgh, 9 S.E. from Tranent, and 4 S. from Had-dington; charmingly situated on a rivulet, tributary to the Tyne. The village, which is well built, consists of two spacious streets, of unequal length, one end of the longest being ornamented by a fine avenue of lofty trees, which extends for a mile in a southerly direction and terminates at Yester House, the noble family mansion of the Marquess of Tweeddale—whose example and fostering influence has accomplished so much in advancing the agriculture of Scotland. The parish church stands at the eastern end of the shorter street, and the parochial school at the north end of the longer one: the former, which was erected in 1708, contains a pulpit of oak, of much greater antiquity than the building itself, called Knox's pulpit, so called from this celebrated preacher having been,

it is said, born in Gifford, but which circumstance is denied by very creditable authorities, and the honour bestowed upon Haddington. The scenery around here is very romantic, and few places can boast of more picturesque or beautiful prospects than are presented to the eye in the neighbourhood of Gifford. Fairs are held here on the last Tuesday in March, the third Tuesday in June, and the first Tuesday in October: and the 'United East Lothian Agricultural Society' hold a meeting here annually, on the first Tuesday in October, for the show of rams.

HADDINGTON.

WITH THE VILLAGE OF BOLTON AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

HADDINGTON, is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, the county town of East Lothian, and the capital of the parish of its name; 17 miles E. from Edinburgh, 38 N. W. from Berwick-upon-Tweed, 11 W. from Dunbar, and 9½ S. from North Berwick; eligibly and pleasantly situated on the left bank of the river Tyne, and is the terminus of a branch line from the North British railway. Haddington is unquestionably of very ancient origin; for in a charter granted by Ada, the widow of Prince Henry (and mother of Malcolm IV and William the Lion), dated 1178, she styled it Meum Burgum de Haddington. The suburb of the town, called Nungate, derives its name from a nuntery founded by Ada, which stood about a quarter of a mile from the town; it was in this abbey or nuntery that a parliament was convened on the 7th July, 1548, during the siege of Haddington, when consent was given to the marriage of the unfortunate Mary with the Dauphin of France, and to her being educated at that court. At the east end of Nungate is seen the roofless ruin of Saint Martin's church, which has been but little used since the reformation. The town has suffered severely, at different periods, by conflagrations and inundations: in 1216 it was burnt by King John, and in 1244 it shared the same fate by accident. In 1358 whole villages were swept off by the overflowing of the Tyne, the waters of which approached the monastery, 'when' (it is related by a monkish chronicle) 'a nun seized the statue of the Virgin, and threatened to throw it into the flood unless she (Mary) protected her house from destruction—whereupon the water gradually retired within its ordinary banks.' The last great conflagration, which was accidental, occurred about two hundred years ago by the carelessness of a nurserymaid. The 4th of October, 1775, is memorable for the rising of the Tyne seventeen feet, at which height it continued for several hours; a plate recording this occurrence is fixed at the East corner of High street.

Considering the great antiquity of this burgh, it may be justly styled handsome. The streets which are spacious are gas-lighted by a company formed in 1835, whose works are erected at the west end of the town, in which quarter conspicuously stand the County Buildings: the architecture is of the old English style; they contain sheriff and justice of peace court-rooms, with appropriate offices, and jury and witness rooms, the erection of this building cost £5,470. The Town's Buildings, to which was added, in 1831, a fine spire, one hundred and seventy feet in height, at an expense of about £1,500, may be recognized as another feature of improvement to the burgh; they comprise the burgh council-room, assembly and public reading room, and the goal; this pile which evidently has been erected at different periods, forms the extreme western end of that long range of buildings separating the spacious High-street from the equally wide Market-street where is held one of the most animated grain markets in the kingdom. The suburb of Nungate is approached across the Tyne by the Waterloo-bridge, of one arch, built in 1817; as also by another bridge, ancient and narrow, of three small arches. The corporation of this burgh consists of a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and nineteen councillors; they hold a court every Saturday; a sheriff and commissary court sits every Thursday; one for small debts every alternate Thursday; a justice of peace court the first Tuesday of each month, (except those of March, May and August, when it takes place on the Thursday instead), a quarter session is held on the first Tuesday of the last-mentioned months, and on the last Tuesday of October; and an adjourned quarter session on the second Tuesday in January. Haddington unites with Dunbar, Jedburgh, Lauder, and North Berwick, on returning one member to parliament.

The trade of Haddington consists principally in corn; on the market days immense quantities are brought for sale, and it is considered one of the leading grain marts of Scotland. The present manufactures comprise sacking, fire-grates, nails, and agricultural implements; there are likewise three breweries, two iron foundries, two tanneries, three corn-mills, and a considerable distillery. Three banking establishments diffuse monetary accommodation—a branch of the British Linen Company's firm, the 'Bank of Scotland,' and the 'Western Bank.' There are two superior inns, the 'George' and the 'Star,' both in High-street. An agricultural society was instituted in Haddington long since, and another at Salton; they were united in 1819, and now form one of the flourishing local associations in the kingdom, annually distributing in premiums nearly £300: the Marquess of Tweeddale is patron.

The parish church is a venerable and capacious structure; it was in former ages the place of worship of the Franciscan monks, to whose extensive religious establishment it was attached; from its architecture and some traditional records it is supposed to have been erected about the twelfth or thirteenth century; the west end is the only portion now used, in the repair and improvement of which nearly £6,000, were expended in 1811; the east end of the ancient monastery, and the old square tower, are now a ruin: in a corner of the edifice is the burial-place of the Lauderdale family, who for many generations possessed Lethington, or 'Lennox's Love,' at present the seat of Lady Blantyre; and in the aisle there are many statues of the Lauderdale succession, large as life, reclining on beds of state. The designations of the other structures for divine worship, with their respective localities and ministers are given in a subsequent page. The charitable institutions are numerous, and highly creditable to the burgh, as are the educational establishments; and several societies and clubs are established on the most respectable footing, for various laudable objects. Haddington lays claim to the honour of being the natal place of that unbending reformer John Knox, and the house where it is contended he was born was not long since generally pointed out in Giffordgate; the village of Gifford, however contests this claim.

The weekly market is held on Friday: the sale of oats and barley commences at half-past twelve, and of wheat at one; that of dairy produce, poultry, &c., at half-past nine in the morning. Trysts are held on the second Friday after the 4th of May, and on the Friday before the second Monday in November; fairs on the second Tuesday of July and the second Thursday of October. The agricultural society hold their meetings here, for the show of stock, implements, seeds, &c., on the first Friday of April, and on the Friday before Christmas-day—the latter being their anniversary meeting; they hold their meetings at Salton and Gifford.

BOLTON is a parish and village—the latter a small one is situated on the road from Haddington to East Salton, three miles south west from the former. About the close of the fifteenth century the lands of Bolton were wrongfully seized by the Hepburns; one of which infamous family, John Hepburn, was executed as the associate of the Earl of Bothwell, his chief, in the murder of Darnley. The church and the parochial school are both in the village: the former is a handsome substantial erection, in the modern Gothic style, ornamented with a square tower; the latter is a well-built and judiciously conducted institution.

INNERWICK AND OLDHAMSTOCKS.

THE parish of INNERWICK is bounded by Oldhamstocks on the east, Spott and Dunbar on the west, the sea on the north, and Craushaws and Longformacns, in Berwickshire, on the south; it measures ten miles in length, by a breadth varying from two to three. The land towards the sea coast is level and very fertile; inland it rises into gently swelling hills, which are ornamented with a variety of plantations, and the fields are all well enclosed. The village of Innerwick is 30 miles E. from Edinburgh, 14 E. from Haddington, and 4 S.E. from Dunbar, lying rather more than a mile to the west of the road leading from the latter town to Berwick. The church, which was built in 1782, and is a neat edifice, stands on a judiciously selected site close by the village, about a mile east of which is the modern and handsome mansion of James Hunter, Esq., of Thurston; and about three quarters of a mile to the south-east of Innerwick, are the remains of the castle of that name. The situation of the ruins is rather secluded; they stand on the summit of a rocky eminence, overhanging a woody glen which divided the castle from the fortlet of Thornton. The castle, which originally belonged to the Hamiltons, of Innerwick, was besieged, taken and destroyed, after an obstinate resistance, by the troops under the Duke of Somerset. There are likewise the remains of several military encampments in this neighbourhood. Dunbar is the post town for this district.

OLDHAMSTOCKS parish is between seven and eight miles in length, by a breadth of about two. The parish of Innerwick bounds it on the north-west, west and part of the south, and Cockburnspath lies on its east. The soil is dry and fertile on the sea coast, and the land rises gradually towards the Lammermoor hills, which are chiefly pastoral. The village is situate three miles south-east from Innerwick, in a valley on the road from Dunbar to Dunse. Dunglass, the elegant modern mansion of Sir John Hall, bart., ornaments that part of the parish near the coast. Dunglass Castle is occasionally noticed in Scottish history: it was originally one of the many strong holds of the Earls of Home, and still gives its title to Lord Dunglass. In 1640 the Earl of Haddington, with several others who had joined the covenanters, took possession of Dunglass Castle, for the purpose of watching the garrison of Berwick. While here the Earl received a letter from General Leslie, and was standing in the court yard reading it to the company there assembled, when the powder magazine blew up, which, throwing down one of the side walls, overwhelmed his lordship, together with his auditors, who all perished in the ruins. This deed is said to have been perpetrated by one of the Earl's faithless attendants, who ignited a barrel of gunpowder with a hot iron. An extensive fair is held at Oldhamstocks the first Tuesdays in July and November for sheep and cattle.

LINTON IN PRESTONKIRK,

STENTON, WHITEKIRK AND TYNNINGHAME, AND WHITTINGHAM.

LINTON, or EAST LINTON, is a village in the parish of Prestonkirk; 22 miles E. from Edinburgh, 8 S.E. from North Berwick, 6 W. from Dunbar, and 5 E. from Haddington; eligibly situated on the left bank of the Tyne. The parish church is at PRESTON, about half a mile north-east from Linton; in the latter are a united secession chapel and the parochial school. The parish of Prestonkirk measures about four miles each way; the surface is agreeably varied, and the soil fertile and well cultivated. About a mile south-west of Linton are the ruins of Hailes Castle, noted as having been one of the residences of Mary and Bothwell; and one mile north of the village is the elegant mansion of Smeaton. From the southern part of the parish rises the mountain of Trapanne Law to the height of seven hundred feet above the level of the sea. A market or meeting is held at Linton every Monday during the harvest season, for hiring reapers.

STENTON is a parish and small village—the latter situated four miles and a half east from Linton. The principal object of attraction in the parish is a beautiful artificial serpentine piece of water, about a mile south-east of the village; it is nearly two miles in length, and averages about four hundred yards in breadth, though in some places it is double the latter proportion, and in others much narrower; and its course is so sinuous that the stranger can form no just idea of its length: its banks are high, steep, and well clothed with wood; and the scenery throughout the meanderings of the lake is of a delightful and picture-que character: by the urbanity and kindness of the proprietress, Mrs. Ferguson, of Raith, parties are allowed to ramble through the grounds and plantations, or make excursions upon the lake, the accommodation of boats for that purpose being provided. A fair is held at the village on the last Tuesday in June and October.

WHITEKIRK is a very small village in the united parish of Whitekirk and Tynninghame, four miles north from Linton; it consists of but a few humble dwellings, the ancient parish church and manse, and the parochial school. Two miles south from Whitekirk is TYNNINGHAME village, also inconsiderable both in size and population. The elegant family seat of the Earl of Haddington, Tynninghame House, is half a mile from the village, enchantingly environed by woods and walks of superlative beauty, at the head of a park sloping gently southward to the Tyne, near its mouth.

WHITTINGHAM is an extensive parish, reaching from the borders of Berwickshire a length of eleven miles northward, but varying in breadth from six to four miles, and still narrower in the middle. In the northern division of the parish are the beautiful pleasure grounds and plantations surrounding the fine mansion of Whittingham, the seat of James Balfour, Esq. The village, a very small one, is three miles south from the village of Linton, and six east from Haddington.

POST OFFICE, LINTON, HEPBURN GIBB, Post Master.—Letters from LONDON and the SOUTH arrive every morning at four and afternoon at half-past one, and are despatched at eleven in the forenoon and evening at a quarter past six.

NORTH BERWICK AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

NORTH BERWICK is a parish, containing a royal burgh and seaport, 23 miles N. E. from Edinburgh, 11 N. W. from Dunbar, and 10 N. from Haddington; situated on a low sandy plain on the shore of the German ocean, at the entrance of the Frith of Forth and on a branch of the North British railway. It consists principally of one long main street, running east and west—another proceeding in a contrary direction, towards the sea—and two or three small ones, or lanes; in that street running seaward are some houses of a superior kind, with a few trees in front. The chief trade of Berwick is the export of corn, potatoes, &c.; the imports are coal and bones for manure. The harbour, which is small, is formed by a tolerably good pier; but, although there is water enough for a large class of vessels, the rocks render the entrance so difficult that but small ones make the attempt; these can ride here in perfect safety, the harbour being boommed: Fidra roads, about two miles to the west, are considered perfectly safe. In the offing are several bleak islets, only of value as rabbit warrens; and four miles to the east, within two miles of the coast, is the Bass Rock, the terror of seamen: it is a mile in circumference, and rises four hundred feet above the surface of the sea; the channel betwixt it and the land is deep, and is frequently taken by steam-vessels to and from London and Leith. The Bass is inaccessible on all sides, except by a narrow pass on the south-west, towards the land; a fearful covered passage penetrates through the rock from east to west, which may be explored at low water. Commanding the landing-place are the remains of a small fortification, which at one time was of considerable strength, and could then be reached only by ladders, or a bucket and chains; it existed as a strong hold for a long period, was a state prison during the reigns of the two Stuarts, and became distinguished, in the early part of the reign of William III. for the preserving fortitude with which it held out against the new dynasty. The Bass is inhabited by myriads of sea fowl, especially solan geese, and it affords pasturage for about a score of sheep, the flesh of which is in great request with epicures. Nearly opposite to the Bass, and about three miles east of Berwick, are the interesting ruins of Tantallon Castle, referred to by Sir Walter Scott as the parting scene of Angus and Marmion, in his poem of 'Marmion.' About a quarter of a mile south-west are seen the extensive remains of an abbey, said to have been founded by David I. for a sisterhood of Cistercian nuns; and not far distant rises North Berwick Law, a conical hill, the summit of which is more than nine hundred feet above the level of the sea.

The date of the first charter, erecting Berwick into a royal burgh, is unknown—that instrument having been lost or destroyed; James VI. however, granted to it a writ confirmatory of all its former privileges, by which it is governed by two bailies, a treasurer, and nine councillors; the burgh joins with Haddington, Dunbar, Lander and Jedburgh, in returning one member to parliament. Behind the High-street stands the parish church; at the end of the Westgate is the united secession chapel, rebuilt in 1831; in the latter thoroughfare is the commodious parochial school, and in the Market-place, where also is the court-house, is an infants' school, erected in 1830. The North Berwick Golfing Club meet at the 'Dalrymple Arms' inn on the first week in the months of May, June, July, and September. Two annual fairs are held; one on the first Thursday after Whitsun-tide, the other on the first Thursday after Martinmas, both old style.

PRESTONPANS,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF PRESTON, COCKENZIE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PRESTONPANS is a market and post town, and burgh of barony; 9 miles E. from Edinburgh, 14 S.W. from North Berwick, 9½ W.N.W. from Haddington, and 3 E. from Musselburgh; situated on the shore of the Frith of Forth: and the North British railway passes about half a mile to the west. The town consists principally of one long street (not remarkably handsome), running parallel with the frith, without any public building worthy of particular notice. The harbour is situated a little to the westward of the town, and is called 'Morison Haven'; it has a good quay for shipping coal and the manufactures of the place, which comprise earthenware, fire-bricks, and other articles made from fire-clay, common bricks and tiles, soap and salt; the latter originated here at an early date, having been made by the monks in 1189; the other works are of more recent introduction, as are the breweries for ale and porter. Oysters are taken in the Forth, near the town; and considerable quantities are sent to the markets of Edinburgh and Newcastle, and even to London. The mines of coal are very rich in this neighbourhood; a seam of this valuable mineral is now being worked by Sir G. G. Suttie, Bart., the proprietor, at Preston Grange colliery, within two hundred yards of the quay at Morison Haven, which is from eight to ten feet in thickness—beneath which it is ascertained there exists eight or nine other strata, making an aggregate body of worked coal of full forty feet: the roof of this mine is composed of a stratum of fire-clay from two to three feet thick, and a band of iron-stone of six inches in this kness. The mines extend a considerable distance under the sea; that of the Preston Links colliery, situated at the east end of the town, has already been driven two hundred yards beyond high-water mark. There are other collieries in the neighbourhood wrought successfully. Prestonpans received its charter as a burgh of barony in 1617, in favour of Sir John Hamilton, of Preston, which ancient village (Preston), is included with the eastern part of the town in the charter; a suburb called 'the Kittle,' or more properly Cuthil, the western portion also enjoys a charter, which was granted originally to the abbot of Newbattle: this division is possessed by Sir G. G. Suttie.

POST OFFICE. PRESTONPANS, Richard Whyte, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Edinburgh), every morning at half-past eight; and are despatched thereto, every afternoon at a quarter-past one, and evening at eight.

SALTON parish lies chiefly in a fine fertile valley, on the north side of the Lammermoor hills; is well enclosed and cultivated, and various parts of the district are embellished with thriving plantations. The village of EAST SALTON, a respectable one, is situated 15 miles E. from Edinburgh, 5 s. w. from Haddington, and the same distance S. E. from Tranent. The parish church, which stands in the village, was almost entirely rebuilt in 1805, in the modern Gothic style, and cruciform, having a fine spire ninety feet high. The celebrated Bishop Burnet had Salton for his first benefice, and for some years performed the duties of parish minister; and it was here that he used the only book of common prayer known to have existed in the episcopal church of Scotland, during the reign of Charles II. This eminent churchman and historian bequeathed a valuable library to the parish, besides a considerable sum for educating, clothing, and apprenticing thirty poor children; the proceeds of the bequest amount now to about £75 per annum. The small river Salton and the Tyne are boundary streams of the parish, which has abundance of excellent lime.

WEST SALTON, in the same parish, is about half a mile from East Salton; between the two villages is Salton Hall, an elegant mansion, the residence of Andrew Fletcher, Esq. The united East Lothian agricultural society hold a meeting at Salton annually, on the last Saturday in May, for the exhibition of young breeding stock. In the village is a good school house, erected in 1803, where one half of the children admitted under Bishop Burnet's charity are instructed, the remainder being taught in the parish school.

PENCAITLAND is a rural village and parish; the former is situated two miles and a half north west from East Salton, the latter is divided into two nearly equal parts by the river Tyne. This district forms the easternmost limit of the great coal range of the Lothians; the coal here is of an excellent quality, lying about fifty-six yards deep, in a nearly horizontal stratum of two feet nine inches thick; an inferior coal is, however, obtained at only sixteen yards below the surface. Besides coal, the parish abounds in good limestone and freestone. On the west side of the Tyne stands a small but comfortable inn; a substantially-built parochial school-house, and an ancient cross. About half a mile to the north-west is Winton House, an extensive pile, partly ancient and partly modern, formerly the residence of the Earls of Winton, previous to the attainder of the Semon family, in 1715. Fountain Hall the seat of Sir John Dick Lauder, Bart and Tyneholme House, are also handsome mansions in this parish. On the eastern side of the river, which is crossed by an old stone bridge, stands the parish church.

TRANENT, a town or post-village in the parish of tropolis, at the head of elevated ground; and the North that name, is 10 miles E. from Edinburgh, 18 w. from British railway passes about a mile to the east. The Dunbar, and 7 w. from Haddington; situated on the town consists of a street running from west to east main road from the latter town to the Scottish me- along the line of the public road, with another diver-ging from about the middle of it. Many of the inhabitants are engaged in the adjacent collieries, which have been wrought in this quarter from the very first discovery of coal in Scotland; others are occupied in agriculture, and on the coast which bounds the northern extremity of the parish.

The church, which stands at the foot of the town, is a plain edifice, with a square tower; Colonel Gardiner, who fell in the battle of Prestonpans, was interred in it. There is also a free church, erected in 1844; the united seceders have a handsome chapel, built in 1826; and there are two schools, one parochial, the other subscriptional. Half a mile below the town, to the north east, is Stuell's hospital, a neat and extensive structure, built in 1820; in it are educated, one hundred and forty poor children, of which number ten receive clothing. Near the southern boundary of the parish is Elphinstown Tower, once a baronial residence; and in another part of the parish are the ruins of Waterfallside Castle, Seton House, and the remains of a once collegiate church. A county market is held in Tranent, every Monday during harvest, for hiring reapers.

GLADSMUIR is a beautiful arable parish, rising in a gentle acclivity from the south shore of the Firth of Forth. The parish church and school stand on the main road between Haddington and Tranent, nearly four miles west from the former town and three east from the latter. The district abounds in coal, and several pits are wrought at PENSTON, which is the principal village in the parish, and chiefly inhabited by colliers. George Heriot, the founder of the hospital at Edinburgh, is said to have been a native of this parish; and Dr. Robertson was its clergyman, while engaged in writing the 'History of Scotland.' From the proximity of the hamlet of Gladsmuir to the scene of the battle of Prestonpans, that conflict was called, by the Jacobite party, 'the battle of Gladsmuir.'

The parish of ORMISTON lies in the western part of the county; it is chiefly level, under the best state of cultivation and well enclosed and planted. The village is situated in the northern part of the parish, at the distance of two miles and a half north of Tranent; and consists of one spacious street, with a cross in the centre. The parish church stands a mile and a half to the south west, and Ormiston Hall, one mile south of the village. One mile further, on the summit of an eminence called Dodridge Law, are the traces of a Danish camp. Fairs are held here on the first Tuesday in July, and fourth Tuesday in October.

INVERNESS-SHIRE.

THIS is a very extensive county, being the first in Scotland in magnitude, though only ranking the tenth in population: it is bounded on the north by the counties of Ross and Cromarty; on the east by those of Nairn and Moray—the frith of the latter also touching it on this quarter; on the south are the shires of Perth and Argyll, with a small part of Aberdeenshire; and the Atlantic Ocean washes its eastern boundary: a small insulated district between the shires of Banff and Moray belongs to it, and several of the Hebrides are politically attached to it. The county (excluding the isles) extends in length, from the point of Arisaig on the west to that of Ardersier on the east, about ninety-two miles, and its greatest breadth is nearly fifty miles: the whole surface comprises 4,051 square miles of land, and one hundred and ninety of lakes. Taking the computed number of acres at 3,000,000, little more than one-tenth are cultivated. The shire comprehends a variety of districts of local importance—as Badenoch in its south part, Lochaber on the south-west, Moidart on the west, Glenelg on the north-west, Glengany in its central part, and others of less consequence, as Glengary, Glenmorison, Glenshiel, &c. The islands annexed to the county are Skye, Harris, North and South Uish, Benbecula, Barra, Eigg, Muck, Rum and Canna; besides a number of islets.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The greater part of the surface of this county consists of lofty mountains, which, especially towards the west, tower above each other in stupendous magnificence. It would be vain to attempt a particular description of the scenery to be met with in this great county, comprehending, as already mentioned, so many mountains—between all which are deep glens of boundless variety and beauty, each having its stream and its lake, and many shrouded in woods. One of the mountains is, nevertheless, too conspicuous to pass over in silence—that is, the noble and celebrated Ben Nevis, the highest elevation of Great Britain, soaring to the height of 4,370 feet above the level of Loch Linnhe. This remarkable eminence stands to the north-east of Fort William, near the shore of an arm of the sea; from its summit, in clear weather, a view can be obtained across nearly the whole of the north of Scotland, from sea to sea; it is generally enveloped, however, in a mantle of clouds, and is toilsome in the ascent: it consists principally of a fine brown porphyry, and contains red granite of a most beautiful grain—it is said also to possess veins of silver and lead. Being cleft, in many places to the very base, by ravines and glens, its precipices are of prodigious altitude; one of them, the inaccessible eyrie of eagles, is nearly five hundred feet perpendicular; and in the fissures, even in the warmest weather, snow remains unmelted. Around its southern base flows the Nevis streamlet, through the glen of that name: it was at the opening of this valley that the Marquess of Montrose achieved the brilliant victory of Inverlochy. The other remarkable eminences are Meal-fourvonic, 3,600; Scarsough, 3,412; and Craig-Phadrig, 1,150 feet respectively above the level of the sea. Inverness-shire is divided into two almost equal parts, by a valley running from south-west to north-east, parallel to the Grampians: this valley is called Glen-more-na-h' Alabin, or the 'Great Glen of Albion,' and appears to be a deep continuous rent between the chains of enormous mountains which range in the same direction; through the greater part of its length the glen is filled with water, or rather an almost connected succession of lakes, not rising very considerably above the level of the sea—a circumstance which suggested the comprehensive plan of forming the Caledonian Canal; of that stupendous undertaking we shall have occasion to speak hereafter. On the eastern side of the county, agriculture is conducted with as much skill, spirit and success, as in any district northward of the Grampians; in the interior, and on the western coast, it languishes under the natural obstructions of soil and climate. Along the whole of the western division, the climate is much more rainy than on the eastern side of the island; it is seldom fair weather in the latter with a westerly wind. On account of these disadvantages, the principal employment of the farmer in this district is the management of black cattle and sheep, especially the former; numerous herds of goats are likewise to be found in almost every parish. The mountains and forests are widely inhabited by the red deer and roe, who roam in safety through seclusions, and lodge in recesses impenetrable to man; the alpine and common hare, and other species of game, are also abundant. The extensive plains which surround the lakes are in general fertile. The military roads in this county, made by the soldiers under General Wade, never fail to excite the astonishment of travellers; additional roads have of late years been formed, and bridges constructed, under the direction of government, through every district of this extensive shire. On the confines of the county are extensive tracts of natural wood, evidently the remains of much larger forests; the fir woods of Glenmore and Strathspey, the properties of the late Duke of Gordon and Sir James Grant, are supposed to be more extensive than all the other natural woods in Scotland if summed together. The trees that grow naturally are oak, fir, birch, ash, mountain ash, holly, elm, wildgreen, hazel, and the Scottish poplar; those planted are chiefly larch, spruce, silver-fir, beech, plane, and fruit trees. Those districts in cultivation, along with those in the course of gradual adaptation to purposes of husbandry, are in the north-east or Lowland quarter, where there are to be seen many fine fields yielding good crops of wheat, barley and oats; potatoes, in several parishes, are produced in great abundance. In the district in the vicinity of Spey, near Castle Grant, a very improved system of cultivation has for many years been introduced. In this shire, as in other counties in the north, the removal of the poorer native classes, or small farmers, by the landlords, has thinned the population, expatriated thousands, and reduced to the lowest conceivable depths of human suffering those wretched families who have been permitted to remain in rude hamlets on the sea-shore. During the severe winters of 1836-7, and likewise 1846-7, the distress of the more indigent inhabitants of the Highlands (owing to the deplorable failure of their naturally limited crops, the extreme inclemency of the weather, and the almost total destitution of fuel,) were of the most appalling description; in the islands, more particularly, this combination of calamities was experienced to a direful extent: in the isle of Skye the want of fuel had reduced the unhappy occupants to such a state of desperation that, it has been asserted, lots were cast, among a certain number of poor families, to decide which should consent to the destruction of their hut, for the purpose of furnishing fire-wood for the general good. The case of these poor people excited universal sympathy throughout the kingdom, and subscriptions, headed munificently by London, poured in for their relief; the sum thus promptly raised was very considerable. Among the provincial towns of England, Manchester stood eminently conspicuous in the humane and benevolent work. We now return, from this digression, to our more general and cheering account of the capabilities of this wide district. The exports of the county may be briefly enumerated in the articles of cattle, wool and corn—the skins of goats, deer, roes, foxes, hares and rabbits—salmon, herrings, dried and salted fish, and fir timber, with the produce of the labours of the hempen and thread manufacturers; the spinning of flax and wool is the occupation of the females, in their respective families, over the whole county: the principal imports will be detailed under the head of INVERNESS. Limestone is everywhere abundant; and in many parts are to be found marble, granite (the latter said to be the most beautiful in the world), and silver, iron and lead ores.

RIVERS AND LAKES, CANALS AND RAILWAYS.—The principal river is the Ness, which flows from Loch Ness to the Moray Frith; the next is the Spey, which, though a larger river in its lower parts, is about the same size while running through the shire: the smaller rivers are the Beaulie, the Foyers, the Garry, the Coiltie, the Glass, the Morriston, the Ennric, the Kinnie, with others of still minor note: the whole produce ample supplies of trout and salmon. On the Foyers is a celebrated waterfall, descending in three leaps to the depth of, together, two hundred feet; a dense mist is continually seen rising from the broken water, and the noise resulting from the fall may be heard at a considerable distance. The CALEDONIAN CANAL, before adverted to, is composed of a chain of lakes, connected with the sea on either side of the island by artificial water-courses and locks; and stretches across Inverness-shire, in a south-westerly direction, from Inverness, on the Moray Frith, to Loch Eil, on the western coast—a distance of about sixty miles. To connect the several lakes by artificial navigation, and thereby the Western Ocean with the North Sea, by the Moray Frith, was an undertaking to which a great portion of the public attention had long been directed; and it was at length commenced by government, in 1803-4. After a persevering labour of about eighteen years, and at an expense of upwards of £800,000, the line was opened for the admission of vessels in 1822: up to 1830, the total expense fell very little short of one million sterling. The canal part is twenty feet deep, fifty feet wide at bottom, and one hundred and ten feet wide at the surface—which affords sailing facilities to frigates of thirty-two guns, or merchant vessels of a similar size and draught: but it is mortifying to find that the facilities offered by this canal are so little appreciated by traders, that the annual dues fall far short of the sanguine calculations, the traffic upon the canal being mainly confined to steam-boats. Besides the lochs which have been made subservient to this great line of canal navigation, there are others of greater or less magnitude scattered throughout the district; and several arms of the sea advance into the western shore of the county. RAILWAYS have not yet extended their iron influence to this remote county, but it will not be long excluded from this modern mode of conveyance, as the Great North of Scotland railway is progressing northward from Aberdeen to Inverness.

DIVISION, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Inverness-shire comprehends twenty-four complete parishes, and thirteen parts of parishes. The county is singularly destitute of towns—the only one it possesses being INVERNESS, which is a royal burgh; it joins with Fortrose (in Ross-shire), Nairn (in the county of its name), and Forres (in Morayshire), in sending one member to parliament; and the county of Inverness returns another representative.

The population returns under the Census for 1851. state the number of inhabitants at 96,280; which decrease is chiefly confined to the western isles and their parishes.

Note.—(a) Abernethy parish is mostly in Elginshire; the entire parish contains 2,337 inhabitants.

(b) The parish of Ardnamurchan is partly in the county of Argyll; the whole parish contains 5,581 inhabitants.

(c) Cawdor parish is mostly in Nairnshire; it contains 1,150 inhabitants.

(d) A small part of Cromdale parish is in Elginshire, but the whole is entered here.

(e) Small parts of the parishes of Croy, Daviot and Dunlithy; Moy and Dalrossie; and Petty are in Nairnshire, but the whole of each is here entered.

(f) Duthil parish, with the exception of Rothiemurchus township, is in Elginshire; the entire contains 2,290 inhabitants.

(g) Rather more than half the population of Kilmale parish are in Argyllshire; the whole contains 5,397 inhabitants.

(h) Kincardine parish is mostly in Ross-shire, where the whole is entered.

(i) Small Isles parish is mostly in Argyllshire; the entire contains 1,457 inhabitants.

(k) Only a very small part of Urray parish is in this county; the remainder is in Ross-shire, where the whole is entered.

The total annual value of Real Property, in Inverness-shire, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £185,565; and the amount assessed to the Property Tax, in 1843, to £181,292 6s. 6d.

BEAULY AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

BEAULY is a village in the extensive parish of Kilmorack; 35 miles s.s. w. from Tain, 12 w. from Inverness, and 9 s. from Dingwall; standing on the south side of the river of the same name, as it pours into Loch Beaulay, an inner branch of the Moray Frith. The situation of this place is beautiful, from the windings and falls of the river, and general appearance of the surrounding country—and thence its name, Beaulieu, that is 'fine place.' Some years since a small harbour was formed, to which vessels of one hundred and fifty tons burthen can come up at high water. The exports chiefly consist of timber, grain and wool; the imports coal (from England), and lime. In other respects its trade is of a local character. In 1838 a branch of the 'North of Scotland Bank' was established here; and three miles north-east of the town is the Old Distillery, adjoining the famed district of Perintosh, where, at one time, the privilege of distilling was permitted free of duty. A Sheriff's court for small debts is held in the village, in the months of January, May and September, in which claims are adjudicated to the amount of £8 6s. 8d. Verging upon the extremity of the frith stand the ruins of the priory founded in the early part of the thirteenth century, and peopled by monks from France, who gave to the place its present name: the venerable remains form an object of curiosity and interest to the tourist; but the falls of Kilmorack are pre-eminent in attraction, and present a scene of great natural beauty. The banks of the river are bold and rocky, and in the course of its windings it divides in such a way as to form the fascinating island of Agas. There is excellent salmon-fishing in the Beaulay, and at the falls—many are occasionally caught by their leaping on the dry banks in their efforts to surmount the cataract. It is recorded that the late Lord Lovat, noticing the frequency of this mistake of that fish, once performed a curious experiment here: he made a fire on the brink of the river and placed on it a large pot filled with water; speedily a salmon, making a leap in a wrong direction, tumbled into the pot, where it was soon boiled, and eaten by his lordship and his attendants: this was done that he might boast in the south of the wonders that existed in the Highlands (which were then but little known), and to say that in his country provisions were so abundant that, if a fire were made and a pot set on it to boil, on the bank of a river, the salmon would of themselves leap into the pot to be boiled. Two miles further, to the westward of the falls, may be contemplated the splendid scenery of the valley of the Dhrum, allowed to surpass any other view in Scotland. Fairs for cattle are held on the Muir of Ord, from the month of April to November, both inclusive; they generally occur on the second or third Wednesday in each month, but are regulated by the Falkirk trysts; the 'Edinburgh Almanack,' however, must be consulted with respect to the precise days on which they take place.

CAMPBELTOWN AND FORT GEORGE.

CAMPBELTOWN is a village in the parish of Ardersier, 31 miles w. from Elgin, 19 w. from Forres, 12 n. from Inverness 8 w. from Nairn, and about a mile from Fort George; situated on the coast of a picturesque bay, and at the foot of an eminence called Cromwell's mount, on the summit of which are the remains of a fortification, and, behind, the view is very extensive, embracing parts of eight or nine counties. This place, which originated only from the residence of those connected with the garrison, is now a village of some pretensions, and possesses many facilities of improvement—has a strong chalybeate spring, which is much frequented by invalids, and it is well adapted as a bathing place. The inhabitants support a public library, and there are two friendly societies, one of which is called 'His Majesty's Friendly Pension Society.' Some good inns are in the village; and several schools, of which two are boarding establishments. A court sits here on the first Monday in every month, for the recovery of small debts; and a fair is held annually, on the 12th of August. The parish church stands at the bottom of the bay.

FORT GEORGE, about a mile from Campbeltown, was erected immediately after the year 1746, at an expense of £160,000, in order to keep the highlands in check. It covers fifteen acres of a level point; projecting into the Moray Firth, the ramparts, on three sides, rising almost out of the sea; it is said to be one of the most regular fortifications in Britain; it was mounted by eighty cannons, on four bastions, and completely commands the entrance into the harbour of Inverness. The present garrison, which as a work of offence or defence, is now happily useless, consists of a few artillerymen, and a depot of about two hundred men. A small pier projects from the fort into the sea, for the use of the ferry boats, which here communicate with the opposite coast of Ross-shire.

POST OFFICE, CAMPBELTOWN, James Campbell, Post Master.—Letters from parts SOUTH, arrive (from ABERDEEN) every morning at half-past seven, and are despatched thereto at five in the evening.

Letters from various parts NORTH, SOUTH and WEST, arrive (from INVERNESS) every evening at five, and are despatched thereto at half-past seven in the morning.

FORT WILLIAM AND FORT AUGUSTUS,

BALACHELISH NORTH AND SOUTH, CORRAN-FERRY, CORPACH AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

FORT WILLIAM (formerly called Maryburgh and also Gordonsburgh) is a town and sea-port, in the parish of Kilmalie, 133 miles n.w. from Edinburgh, 106 n. w. from Glasgow, 65 s. w. from Inverness, and 40 n. e. from Oban; situated on the eastern shore and near the head of Loch Linne. The chief branches of business are agriculture and fishing; and it is a place of considerable resort for the tourist and the traveller in the summer months; at this season there is a conveyance to Liverpool, by steam-boat, once a fortnight—and a communication is maintained with Glasgow and Inverness, by the same mode, three times a week throughout the year. A substantial stone quay was erected here in 1834, by the society for promoting the British fisheries, and by subscription, at an expense of about £1,500. A very handsome suspension bridge of two hundred and fifty feet span was erected over the river Lochy by Donald Cameron, Esq. of Loch-Eil, at a cost of about £2,000: Mr. James Dredge, engineer of Bath, was the able superintendent of the work. The town consists of one tolerably regular street, nearly half a mile in length, which contains some good buildings, and the branches of the 'British Linen Company's Bank,' and the 'National Bank of Scotland'—these establishments affording facilities to the monetary commercial transactions in this remote part of the kingdom. Fort William is governed by a baillie, who is appointed by Sir Duncan Cameron, Bart., of Fassfern and Callart, proprietor of the place; and by the reform act it is appointed one of the stations for taking the votes of the county electors. The sheriff-substitute holds a court here every Thursday during the session at Inverness.

The fort, from which the town derives its modern name, 'Fort William,' is a little distance north of the town, and was first founded in 1655, during the protectorate of Cromwell, by the advice and under the direction of General Monk; no part of what was then built is now standing, except the old barrack erected in 1692, and from its ruinous state has been condemned for some time. The garrison consists of a detachment of twenty men, a subalter officer, and a barrack sergeant, and the battery is mounted with twelve twelve-pounders. The fort was attacked by the Highland clans under Prince Charles, in 1745, and made a successful defence. In the river Lochy, to the north-east of the town, is a long established and sometimes very productive salmon fishery, the principal part of the produce of which is sent to London, Edinburgh and Glasgow. A mile and a half north-east from Fort William is Inverlochy Castle, said to have been founded anterior to the Christian era: tradition may err in this particular, but it was certainly rebuilt, on its present extensive site, by an order from the Scotch government, in the reign of Edward I. of England, by one of the Cumyn family, the western tower being still called Cumyn's tower. It consists of four large round towers, thirty feet high, connected by a wall, or screen, twenty feet high and ten feet thick, forming a quadrangle of large dimensions: the wall is in a fair state of preservation, but the towers are much decayed; and in 1835 the then proprietor, the Marquess of Huntly, with judicious taste enclosed the whole structure at a considerable expense. In 1847 was erected at Fort William a handsome obelisk of granite, thirty feet high, by Sir Duncan Cameron, Bart. to the memory of his brother, Captain Peter Cameron. The most sublime object in this district, and one which attracts a crowd of visitors hither in the summer, is the majestic Ben Nevis, more particularly noticed at a previous page: the ascent to the summit is difficult, and even perilous; but should the intrepid adventurer be so fortunate as to attain the topmost region on a fine cloudless day, the contemplation of the almost boundless expanse of prospect, spread out far beneath his aerial position, will amply compensate him for his toil and perseverance. The whole country, indeed, between Fort William and Glasgow, is perhaps unequalled in Europe for variety of scenery. Fairs are held on the second Wednesday in June and November, for cattle; and a great wool and sheep market on the first Tuesday after the second Thursday in July.

FORT AUGUSTUS is 30 miles N.E. from Fort William, situated at the south-west end of Loch Ness. This fort with Fort George on the Moray Firth and Fort William, above noticed are within the county of Inverness, the three forming a line of fortresses which were erected to overawe the Highlands, since the expulsion of the house of Stuart. They are now almost if not entirely useless, though still kept in repair and answering as barracks for a few soldiers and the residence of a barrack-master. There are a few shops for the sale of the common articles of consumption and one public-house.

BALACHELISH NORTH is situated on the north shore of Loch Leven, about 12 miles S. from Fort William. This place, sometimes spelt Ballichulish, has a small neat church, of the establishment and a well-conducted parochial school. In BALLACHELISH SOUTH is a productive slate quarry, wrought by the proprietor, Charles Stewart, Esq. Not far from the quarry is found valuable limestone, its product possessing superior adhesive qualities; and an extensive kiln was erected by Mr. Ewen Cameron: and it is now worked by Donald Cameron, Esq., of Loch-Eil, the proprietor. About five miles east, near the margin of Loch Leven, is Callart, the elegant mansion of Sir Duncan Cameron, of Fassfern and Callart; and on the south shore, opposite to Callart, near the entrance of one of the most romantic glens in Scotland, is Glencoe, formerly the property and residence of Ewen Macdonald, Esq., of Glencoe. Balachelish North is united with CORRAN-FERRY NORTH (in Argyleshire), on the opposite side of Loch Linne, into one ecclesiastical parish; the latter is about three miles west from the former, and nine south from Fort William; it has a parliamentary church and a good inn. About a mile west, not far from the border of Loch Linne, is Ardower House, the respectable mansion and family residence of Colonel Maclean, surrounded with fine plantations, at the foot of the Ardower hills.

CORPACH is a widely spread, but not very populous village, on the north shore of Loch Eil (in the county of Argyle, but in the same parish as Fort William), three miles north from the Fort; though this village is in Argyleshire, the principal part of the parish of Kilmalie, in which it is situate, is in the county of Inverness, and is surrounded by that county and Loch Eil. Corpach is chiefly to be noticed as being the southern commencement of that great national undertaking, the Caledonian Canal, which here enters Loch Eil by four locks; a little above are eight others, called 'Neptune's staircase'; they are capable of admitting vessels of three hundred tons (not drawing above twelve feet water), and each lock rises eight feet. A salmon fishery here belongs to Messrs. Moir & Son, Aberdeen; a large number of fish are preserved and shipped hence for the Liverpool market. Kilmalie parish church is situate about half a mile from the end of the canal, at Corpach; it was erected in 1784. Near the church stands a pyramidal obelisk, of considerable height, with a large tablet of white marble at its base, raised to the memory of Colonel John Cameron, who was slain at the battle of Waterloo, in 1815, while commanding the 92d Highlanders. The road through Corpach leads to the district of Arasaig, about forty miles distant, and Moidart and Loch Shiel. At Borraddale, in Moidart, Prince Charles Stuart landed on the 25th of July, 1745: he sailed up Loch Shiel on the 18th of August; the following day he landed and entered Glenfinnan, where he was met by Cameron of Loch Eil, and Macdonald of Keppoch, with their clansmen: commemorative of this circumstance, Macdonald of Glenalladale has erected a monument.

GRANTOWN AND CROMDALE.

GRANTOWN is a neat modern village in the parish of Cromdale, the latter lying nearly equal in this county and in that of Moray; Grantown being situated in that district of the parish called Inverallen, on the north bank of the river Spey, rather more than a mile south from Castle Grant, one of the seats of the Earl of Seafield; and at the distance of 35 miles s. e. from Inverness, 22 s. from Forres, 8 n.e. from Duthill and 6 n. from Abernethy. Grantown was begun about the year 1774, under the patronage of the Grant family, who have been its continued benefactors; and a large number of the inhabitants retain the name of Grant to the present day. The trade of the place is of a retail and domestic character, and there is a fair proportion of the ordinary useful shops and businesses which are usually found in a small country town. There are two distilleries in its vicinity, and in the village are established two banks, namely a branch of the 'National Bank of Scotland' the other of the 'Caledonian Bank'; there is also a branch of the Inverness savings' bank. Besides the church of the parish in Grantown, there is a royal bounty church, a free church, and in course of erection a baptist chapel. There are two schools, one supported by the Earl of Seafield, the other on the plan of the Edinburgh Orphans' Hospital. Fairs the first Tuesdays in the months of January and May, the last Friday in June, and the first Thursday in November, all old style.

INVERNESS AND ITS VICINITY.

INVERNESS, the capital of the large county of that name, is 156 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 103 w. by N. from Aberdeen, 162 N. from Glasgow, 125 N.W. from Dundee, 134 s. from Thurso, and 27 w. by s. from Forres; situated upon the northern extremity of the Great Glen of Scotland, and upon the banks of the Ness (near the confluence of that river with the sea), about a mile from the northern entry of the Caledonian Canal. 'Inverness,' says Dr. Johnson, 'may be properly styled the capital of the Highlands;' and it is so usually esteemed. We learn from Richards' 'Itinerary' (one of the oldest documents extant relative to the affairs of Great Britain, and referring to the period between A.D. 138 and 170), that Inverness was one of the ten cities of Britain enjoying the Jus Latinitatis: only two others in Scotland are mentioned, Perth and Dunbarton. After the Romans withdrew, Inverness became the seat of the Pictish monarchy. Here Macbeth, the great lord of Ross and Moray, had a castle, which Boethius, and after him Shakspere, as signs as the scene of King Duncan's murder; Buchanan's relation is to the same effect: this castle, says the great poet,

— hath a pleasant seat; the air
Nimbly and sweetly recommends itself Unto our gentler senses.

Upon or near to the site of this castle, a royal castle or fort was afterwards erected, which was in existence until 1746, when it was blown up during the rebellion;

a new building (which will be hereafter noticed) now occupies the site of the old one.

The situation of Inverness is so singularly beautiful as to have compelled a recognition of its claims to that character, even amid the dry technical details of its great charter; 'its good and pleasant situation' is there noticed as one of the reasons for its endowment as a royal burgh. The eminent lexicographer before cited, in speaking of Inverness, adds—'the language of this town has been long considered as peculiarly elegant; a fact which he attributes to the intermixture of Cromwell's soldiers with the inhabitants: this is a fanciful hypothesis in many ways, and at once appears hardly reconcilable with the fact that the Gaelic continues to be the prevailing language still spoken by the common people; the soldiers must have learnt the one when they taught the other. The greater part of the town lies on the eastern bank of the Ness—here a broad, clear, and equably flowing stream. The streets are well paved, provided with common sewers, and during the winter months suitably lighted with gas. In the summer months Inverness is much frequented by tourists and sportsmen from the south, to the greater number of whom it forms the northern limit of their excursions. Being the centre to which the principal lines of road in the Highlands converge—having the Caledonian Canal on the one hand, and the Moray Firth on the other—it maintains a rapid, frequent, and easy intercourse, both by land and water, with all parts of the kingdom. The environs of Inverness combine picturesque beauty in detail with magnificence as a whole; uniting,' says a tourist, 'two opposite qualities, and each in the greatest perfection—the characters of a rich open lowland country with those of the wildest alpine scenery; both being also close at hand, and in many places intermixed; while to all this is added a series of maritime views not often excelled.' The walks near the town are deserving of a stranger's perambulation: whether along the banks of the river to the wooded islands of the Ness, or along the sea-shore, or by the margin of the canal; or to the singularly-shaped hill of Tomnahurich, or 'hill of the fairies,' or to the summit of Craig Phadric (the vitiifications of which afford matter of speculation to the antiquarian), or to the druidical circles in the 'Leys,' in each and all of these directions there is much to please and interest the man of taste or of science.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND WORKS.—Pre-eminent among these, as much for its own architectural beauty as for its commanding position, is the Castle of Inverness, erected on the site of the old royal castle. The modern edifice was built in 1836 at a cost of £10,000, for the accommodation of the courts of justice in the northern circuit, and for the preservation of the records and transactions of the judicial business of the county; it is built from a design of Mr. Burn, architect, Edinburgh, after the old English castellated style, and harmonises well, from its varied projecting and receding masses, its square and round towers, with the waving outline of the surrounding scenery; it contains a noble court-room, a commodious county hall, and various suitable apartments for judicial business and the convenience of the different functionaries connected therewith. In 1849 was erected, as an appendage to the castle, a very commodious new jail; and the old one has been converted into a police office, with cells for the prisoners. Amongst the other public buildings, institutions, &c. exclusive of the edifices for divine worship, are, the Town Hall, in High-street; the Northern Meeting Assembly Rooms, in Church-street; the Northern Infirmary, a large well-constructed building, with an imposing exterior, a little way out of the town, on the bank of the river; the Royal Academy, a liberally endowed institution, with a museum, in Academy-street; the United Charities' Building, and the Observatory, above View-place; Raining's school, a prosperous and useful one, on School-hill; the Central School, in Green of Muir-town, established by the society for educating the poor in the Highlands; and the banks, which we shall have again to mention.

Two other educational institutions must be noticed as highly efficient in the benefits they respectively confer—one of them, the Faraline Park Institution, or Bell's school, was established in 1842 by bequest of the late Dr. Bell, LL.D. of Madras, for the advantage of the middle and humbler class of children, who are instructed in all the useful branches of an English education—their number is generally about four hundred. The premises form an elegant building in an open and airy situation on the east side of the town. The front is embellished by a beautiful row of fluted columns. The Free Church Institution—another excellent establishment for training youth, was opened in 1846 in a large and commodious building, occupying an elevated site contiguous to the observatory. Among the public works are those for gas and water, the quays or harbours; the post office erected in 1843, the bridges, &c. The old bridge consisting of seven arches, erected in 1688, was on the 25th January, 1849, carried away by the overflowing of the river, and that portion of the town, lying on the north side of it, was completely inundated, and the inhabitants compelled to make use of boats to pass through the street. A new bridge is now about being erected at the joint expense of the government and the inhabitants: at present there is only one for foot passengers.

COMMERCE, TRADE, &c.—At the quays and also at the Caledonian canal wharfs, within a mile of the town, vessels of considerable tonnage may receive or discharge their cargoes, while large ships have excellent anchorage in Kessock Roads, just above the confluence of the river with the sea. There are registered at the custom house of Inverness two hundred and thirty-three vessels, of the aggregate burthen of 10,857 tons. The trade between this port (including some small ones adjacent), and London employs one large steam ship and two schooners; between Inverness and Leith, three steam ships and two sailing vessels; between Inverness and Aberdeen, two sailing vessels; and between Inverness and Glasgow there are three steamers plying through the Caledonian canal. The exports from this port are chiefly grain, wool, timber, salmon, and hempen cloth, &c. The imports comprise hemp, timber, Archangel tar, guano, and wheat. In 1849-50 there were imported two hundred and thirty tons of hemp; six cargoes of timber: two of tar: four of guano (or 2,400 tons), and five of wheat, amounting to 1,927 quarters. There are two yards for ship-building which is carried on here with success; an old and extensive manufactory for hempen cloth, a manufactory for woollen cloths, tartans and carpetings; four breweries and a distillery. The hempen cloth is principally exported to London, and some to the East and West Indies; and although this branch is not so flourishing as at one period, it yet employs about three hundred persons. The produce of the breweries is chiefly for home consumption: the Thornbush Brewery is the oldest and the principal. There are no fewer than six banking companies established in Inverness—namely, a branch of the Bank of Scotland; one of the Commercial Bank of Scotland; one each from the British Linen Company; the North of Scotland; the National Bank of Scotland; and the Caledonian Parent Bank: the premises of the last named establishment, erected in 1849, form a very handsome building, on the north side of High-street; it is of freestone having a row of elegant Corinthian columns in front, and is highly ornamental to the locality in which it stands. The shops in Inverness are well supplied with goods of every description; and are resorted to, not only by the inhabitants of the town and its vicinity, but also by those of the remoter vales of the shire, and by many from the contiguous counties. The press of Inverness publishes two newspapers weekly—the 'Courier' and the 'Advertiser.'

Inverness is a royal burgh of great antiquity, having, it is said, received a charter in 1067 from Malcolm Canmore; and there are on record four charters in its favour from King William the Lion, besides various subsequent ones by several of his successors. The great charter of the town, however, was conferred by James VI. in 1591. The municipal government is vested in a provost, four bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, and fourteen councillors, in all twenty-one; considerable charitable funds are under their management. The burgh in conjunction with those of Nairn, Forbes and Fortrose returns one member to the imperial parliament. Being the seat of the sheriff of the county, the courts of that functionary are held here

—the sittings are on every Thursday from the 15th of May to the 25th of July, and from the 15th of October to the 4th of April. The sheriff's small debt court is held every Friday at the same periods for the recovery of sums not exceeding £8. 6s. 8d.; and a justice of peace court is held monthly for adjudicating claims not exceeding £5 in amount. This town is the appoint'd seat of a society for the education of the poor in the Highlands, of the Medical Society of the North, of the Inverness-shire Farming Society, the Inverness and Northern Horticultural Society, and of the Northern Institution, whose place of meeting is before noticed: this latter body is composed of a considerable number of noblemen and gentlemen in the northern counties, associated for purposes of local utility: horse-races take place under their auspices, and their meeting generally induces the temporary residence of the fashionables of the district. A Mechanics' Institution, a Savings' Bank, a Bible Society &c., have likewise their patrons and supporters in Inverness. Of the places for divine worship a list is appended to the Directory, with their localities and officiating ministers, and the educational establishments, parochial, endowed, or otherwise will be found under their proper head.

MARKETS AND FAIRS.—the markets are held on Tuesday and Friday; and the fairs are, 'Candlemas fair,' held on the first Wednesday after the 11th of February (old style), on the 11th if it should fall on a Wednesday; 'Whitsuntide Market' on the Wednesday next after the 25th of May; 'St. Andrew's fair,' on the first Wednesday after the 18th of July (new style); 'Marymas Fair,' the first Wednesday after the 15th of August (old style), or on the 20th (new style), if on a Wednesday; and 'Martinmas Fair,' on the first Wednesday after the 11th of November (old style): there are also two statutes or 'hiring markets,'—one on the last Friday in April, the other on the last Friday in October.

We shall now extract, with a few alterations, from 'Anderson's Guide to the Highlands' (an able, scientific, and well-got-up work), the following list of objects, in and about Inverness, worthy of being visited by the stranger:—

KINGUSSIE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

KINGUSSIE, the gaelic name of which is the termination of the 'Pine Forest,' is the name of a parish and beautiful village, 44 miles S. from Inverness, and 73 N. from Perth, on the great road between the two towns; and 50 miles N. E. from Fort William. The district in which this village is situated is nearly in the centre of the Highlands of Scotland, where the genuine race of the Gael and their original language at one time, existed in its purity. The inhabitants, in the time of war are fond of military life, and the 42nd and 92nd Highland regiments included many men from this quarter; the late Duke of Gordon was the popular colonel of the corps for many years. The commissioners of roads and bridges, in prosecution of their liberality towards the Highlands of Scotland, opened lately a beautiful new line of road, from Kingussie to Fort William, by Loch Laggan, through part of the remains of the ancient Caledonian forest, and in sight of the famed parallel roads in Glenroy. A more romantic route for the traveller than this by Loch Laggan is rarely to be seen. The Marquess of Abercorn has erected a costly and beautiful shooting establishment, Ardverikie Lodge, on the banks of the lake, which Her Majesty visited in 1846. Another improvement in this district has been effected by the erection of a substantial wooden bridge over the Spey, which previously was only crossed by a ferry. The village stands on the north bank of the river, not far from the north base of those hills on which Norval's father 'fed his flock,' in sight of Cairn-Gorm, famous for its transparent stones, and Soul-Beira-muchdugh, one of the loftiest mountains in Britain. The village contains a small gaol, in which the justices of peace courts for the district of Badenoch are held monthly, and a sheriff's small debt court is held on the first Tuesdays in January, May and September.

The church, which is of modern erection, commodious and handsome, is on a hill, at the east-end of the village, in a situation which is not to be surpassed for beauty. In 1844 a handsome free church was erected capable of accommodating a large congregation. There are three burial grounds in the place, two of which are known to be of great antiquity, the walls of the places of worship being still visible: one of the cemeteries is named after St. Columbus, and is said to have been originally dedicated to that holy personage. On the south bank of the river opposite the village stand the ruins of Ruthven Castle, which was a barrack in the reign of George II, and burnt down in 1745. It was a place of great antiquity and note, having been the residence and castle of Walter Cumming, Lord of Badenoch, and his ancestors, who, at one period, lorded over almost all the Highlands of Scotland. Walter Cumming's oppression and tyranny became so intolerable to all within his power, which was very extended, that the Clan Chattan (M'Phersons) threw off the yoke, and expelled the tyrant from the country; for which deed of valour they acquired the red hand and dagger in addition to their coat of arms. Ruthven Castle was the rallying point of those brave but deluded heroes of 1745-6, where they assembled after the battle of Culloden, in considerable strength and high spirits, eager and anxious to be again led against the Duke of Cumberland. Balls and merriment were kept up by the officers and men for several nights while expresses were despatched in quest of the Prince, who was found wandering in the mountains, and making for the Hebrides, sunk in spirits and in deep despair, returning the answer to his faithful adherents that 'all was over with him.' Their loss at Culloden was nothing compared to the depression this caused to their spirits by disappointment. From that moment they dispersed, broken hearted, to meet no more. Three miles east of the village is Blville House, the seat of Miss M'Pherson, and built by James M'Pherson, Esq. translator of some of Ossian's poems, &c. Near to the house and road side is a neat monument, to the memory of the 'bard of Morven' and half way between it and the village, a little off the road, is to be seen a cave of great antiquity and curiosity, well worth the stranger's notice. Eight miles south-west of Kingussie, on the Fort William road, stands Cluny Castle, the seat of Evan M'Pherson, Esq. the chief of Clan Chattan. Eight miles to the east, close to the Spey and in a favourite spot, the romantic vale of Kenara, are interred the remains of the late Duchess of Gordon, and on a rock in the same vale has been erected a beautiful monument of granite, ninety feet high, to the memory of the late Duke: it was raised by subscription amounting to £1,200. About five miles from Kingussie on the Perth road is Iverhewen Moor, celebrated for a hard-fought battle between the clans Macintosh and Cameron, and in which Cluny and the M'Phersons ultimately interfered; the consequence of which gave occasion, sixteen years afterwards, for the bloody contest between thirty M'Phersons and the same number of Davidsons, on the North Loch of Perth, in presence of King Robert III. of Scotland and his court, from which eleven of the former, and only one of the latter returned alive, and all seriously wounded. Partial notice of this memorable event is to be found in Sir Walter Scott's 'Fair Maid of Perth.' The hills of Badenoch are no where surpassed for the abundance of all sorts of game to be found amongst them, which brings a great number of noblemen and gentlemen to the country during the shooting season. The Dowager Duchess of Bedford's summer residence is the Down, in the beautiful and romantic valley of Rothiemurcas, ten miles east of Kingussie. John Leslie, the celebrated Bishop of Ross, in Scotland, was a natural son of the parson of Kingussie, in Badenoch, and born there in 1527. He had his education in the university of Aberdeen, and in 1547 was made canon of the cathedral. He was the principal opponent of John Knox. There are several fairs held at Kingussie during the year, but the days of holding them are for the most part regulated by the Beaulieu and Falkirk fairs.

PORTREE IN SKYE,

WITH THE ISLANDS OF EIGG, RAASAY, RONA, &c.

PORTREE is a parish in the Isle of Skye—the village of Portree is the principal one in the parish or the adjacent isles, and is a flourishing little sea-port; 110 miles w. from Inverness, the same distance N.W. from Oban, 80 N. from Tobermory, 22 from Dunvegan, and 25 N.W. from Broadford. The village is seated a little above the shore, at the summit of a somewhat steep acclivity, thickly planted with thriving trees. It is of some business, has two banking establishments, a woollen manufactory in the vicinity, and a good inn and posting-house. In the mill, which was erected in 1850, are manufactured tweeds, plaids, yarns and hosiery. About thirty persons are generally employed within the building; but these form a very inconsiderable proportion to those who are engaged in the village and neighbourhood, as 'out-door knitters;' and the establishment will, doubtless, prove of great benefit to the place. The quay, erected about 1819, has not much depth at low water, but the tide rises from twelve to sixteen feet: the bay is safe and spacious, having a depth of from five to twelve fathoms, and the anchorage is excellent. On a high rocky promontory, projecting some distance into the bay, at whose base the quay is erected, stands an octagonal tower, built in 1834, by Dr Alexander McLeod, from which there is a splendid view of the surrounding scenery. On the west of the village, amidst some thriving plantations, stands the house of Patrick Cooper, Esq.; the agent of Lord Macdonald; and on the south side of the bay, at a distance of nearly three miles, is the residence of the sheriff substitute, Thomas Fraser, Esq. (who holds a court here once a week during session), and the manse of Portree. The votes of the county electors in Skye, for a member of parliament for Inverness-shire, are taken at Broadford. The chief exports are sheep, black cattle, wool, kelp, salt herrings, salmon (pickled chiefly for London), and cod and ling, both salt and dry, principally for Glasgow and Liverpool.

SKYE is an extensive island on the western coast of Scotland, forming no inconsiderable portion of the county of Inverness, being the largest of the western isles with the exception of Lewis. It is forty-six miles from north to south, and twenty-seven from east to west, in a direct line; but the parliamentary road commencing at Armadale in the south, and running chiefly on the eastern coast to Uig, in the north, is seventy-two miles long; and there is a cross road extending nine miles still further in the latter direction. The general face of the country is mountainous, which although it may be inviting to the tourist from the sublime scenery it presents, is a great barrier to the successful operations of the husbandman; and the island cannot be called fertile, if we except the narrow stripes of land in the valleys, and some parts near the coast. The eastern part of the island is separated from Glenelg, on the main land, by a narrow sound, called the Kyles of Skye. The island is chiefly the property of Lord Macdonald, and of Macleod, of Macleod; and is principally occupied in large grazing farms of six or seven miles in extent, producing great numbers of sheep and black cattle, and some small horses. Formerly great quantities of kelp were made here. Eight miles south from Portree, in the district known as 'Macleod's country,' may be contemplated some of the finest and beautifully-varied mountain scenery in the Highlands. This part also abounds with game; and like a d river angling may here be successfully pursued by the tourist, and refreshment and accommodation obtained at the Slizchan Inn, situated at the base of the celebrated Cullen hills. In this locality, among other interesting objects, the visiter will find the beautiful and famous 'spar cave,' Scarva, &c. Dunvegan Castle, once the princely residence of the chief of the Macleods', is distant twenty-one miles from Portree, but is here noticed as one of the most ancient structures in the Highlands: it has been lately repaired and fitted up, at a large expense, for the residence of William Langley, Esq. Not far from the castle is a convenient inn. In proceeding to Portree, from the south, is seen from the deck of the steamer, Armadale Castle, the seat of Lord Macdonald, agreeably situated near the shore, at the south-east corner of the island, amidst thriving plantations and sheltering woods. The fisheries on this coast, especially in the sounds between Skye and the main land, are sometimes very productive. The coasts are indented with many fine and secure ports, the principal of which are Portree and Broadford on the east, the Isle of Oransay on the south, and Dunvegan and Stein on the north.

The peculiar features of Skye are its romantic views; its mountain and water scenery; the charming seats with which the country is studded, as seen from different points; and some natural curiosities in certain localities. A particular notice of all the places worthy of a stranger's visit would occupy more space than we could devote to the subject; we cannot, however, omit noticing the small lake of Cornishk, about ten miles south-west from Broadford, whose sid s rise almost perpendicularly from its deep black waters to a great height; also a spar cave on the coast of Strathard, and about seven miles north of Broadford and Strorr, is exhibited one of the most grand and imposing scenes in Scotland: this is a mountain seven miles north of Portree, whose summit is full two thousand feet above the level of the sea, the eastern side being a grand precipice of bare rugged rock, often rising perpendicularly five hundred feet; but the most remarkable feature about it, and which renders it dissimilar to any other mountain, are several detached pyramids, or almost perpendicular columns of rock, varying from three hundred to near five hundred feet in height; some standing at a considerable distance from the mountain, and appearing as though the intermediate parts, being too soft to resist the influences that acted upon them, had crumbled away, leaving the harder materials as a monument of their ability to resist the ravages of time and the ragings of the tempest. One of these isolated spiral masses of rock rises one hundred and sixty-five feet from the base, and is two hundred and forty feet in circumference: it seems, at a distance, to stand upon an apex, from which one might imagine it would be easy to remove it; indeed, the spectator cannot divest himself of the apprehension that it would fall upon him should he approach too near. The scene is altogether grand and imposing, and must be visited to be appreciated. The fairs in Skye are held as follows:—at Portree, on the last Tuesday in May and August, and the third Tuesday in November, for black cattle, horses, &c.; at Broadford, on the Thursdays after the Portree May, August, and November fairs; at Fairbridge, on the second Tuesday in November; and at Sligichan, on the third Tuesday in September, for horses and black cattle.

EGG, or Egg, is a small island in the Hebrides, belonging to Inverness-shire, about 12 miles s. w. of the promontory of Sleate, the most southern point of Skye. It is about three miles long from north to south, surmounted on the southern extremity by a perpendicular wall or rampart called the Scair of Eg, composed of pitchstone porphyry columns, running about a mile in length nearly east and west, from 300 to 400 feet broad, and from 350 to 400 feet high, the summit being about 1,340 above the level of the sea. The Scair is distinctly columnar, the pillars generally being about a foot in diameter; though there is a stratum of columns at the east end, inclining towards the horizon, whose diameters are from two and a half to three feet. The appearance of this singularly grand production of nature from every point is indescribably magnificent, and, when viewed from the east end, assumes the form of a stupendous ruined tower. At the base of the rocks, on the north and south sides, several large caves have been formed, by the softer parts of the rocks crumbling away; the bases of the columns above form the ceiling of these caves, and, as in Staffa, present a resemblance to the surface of honeycombs. Two steam boats pass here on their way to Portree, and return every week in summer.

RAASAY, or Razay, is an island of the Hebrides, belonging to the parish of Portree, about thirteen miles long and two broad, lying to the east of Skye, opposite to Portree, separated from it by the sound of Raasay, about four miles wide. It is the property of Macleod of Raasay, who has a fine mansion in a bay near the south-western extremity of the island. There are other islands in the neighbourhood of Skye, as SCALPA to the east, RUM and CANNA to the south-west, &c.

RONA, or Ronay, is an island of the Hebrides, lying at the northern extremity of Raasay, from which it is separated by a strait, just passable for vessels. It is about four miles in length by one in breadth. The little arable ground which occurs in Rona, surrounds the scattered village that lies at the bottom of a bay, which contains nearly, if not, all the population of the island.

POST OFFICE, PORTREE, Alexander M'Donald, Post Master.—Letters from GLASGOW, EDINBURGH and the SOUTH and WEST, arrive (from DINGWOOD and BROADFORD) every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday morning about half-past one, and are despatched on Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings about eight.

KINCARDINESHIRE,

OCCASIONALLY called the MEARNS (and improperly Mearns-shire), is a small county on the eastern coast; bounded on the north and north-west by Aberdeenshire, on the east by the North Sea, and on the south and south-west by Forfarshire. Its form describes nearly that of a triangle, having to the sea its principal or most extensive base, and which reaches along the coast from the bay of Aberdeen to the mouth of the North Esk river, about thirty miles—its greatest breadth, inland, being twenty-four. The contents of the area, according to Mr. Gardiner, who surveyed the county for a map, were 243,444 English acres, of which 74,849 were in actual cultivation, 27,816 improvable by tillage, 17,609 woodland, and 123,170 mountains, &c. The government returns state its area to comprise three hundred and eighty-two square miles, or 243,200 statute acres.

NAME AND EARLY HISTORY.—The shire takes its name from Kincardine, formerly a small town in the parish of Fordoun, and which was the seat of the county courts, &c., until the year 1600, when they were removed to Stonehaven. Kincardine, which has dwindled into a mere hamlet, was formerly connected with an ancient seat of royalty, called Kincardine Castle, of which only the foundations of the walls can now be traced. The phrase Mearns before referred to, after strict investigation, is in all probability, merely of local meaning; but it is generally said to have been affixed to this part of Scotland, from its having become the property of Mernia, a brother of King Kenneth II., another brother, called Angus, conferring his name upon the neighbouring county of Forfar. In former times the Hollow of the Mearns was the only passable access to the north of Scotland, owing to the hills occupying uninterruptedly all the rest of the breadth, inland, except at this point, and it was the common passage for armies going to and fro, since the earliest periods of history; yet, unless the great battle between Galgacus and Agricola took place here, as some historians aver, this county has not been the theatre of any extraordinary events, nor the scene of any great military achievements. The peasantry of the shire have always been considered a very able and industrious race of men; and the men of the Mearns is a proverbial expression of old date—implying trust-worthiness and integrity.

SOIL, SURFACE, PRODUCE, &c.—The county is now almost exclusively of an agricultural character, for although it has the advantage of so extensive a range of sea coast, it possesses no harbour of any commercial importance; neither have manufactures made much progress in the district. The soil of Kincardine is of a very productive kind, and is cultivated in a style nowhere surpassed in Scotland; a sufficient proof of this is the fact, that of all the lands in tillage nearly a seventh part is devoted to the culture of the turnip. This county is destitute of both coal and marl, and there is very little limestone—all of which deficiencies bear hard upon agricultural improvement; these drawbacks, however, seem to have excited more strongly the spirit of enterprise amongst the agriculturists, who import lime in great quantities from other districts by means of the Frith of Forth. The limestone of the county obtained near the coast is burnt with coal; in the more inland parts with peat or wood; but from the scarcity of fuel (no seams of coal being worked from Fife to Sunderland), there is much more lime imported into than is wrought in the shire. In Arbuthnot parish, and near St. Cyrus on the sea-shore, beautiful pebbles and jaspers are found. The coast is partly flat and partly rocky, and at the north-eastern corner of the county terminates the chain of the Grampians, where they form what is called the Girdle Ness, which presents to the sea a bold face of rock from sixty to eighty feet high. The chief mountains and eminences are Mount Battock, 3,465 feet in height; Clacknabane, 2,370; Cairniemount, 2,000; Kerloch, 1,890; the Hill of Fare, from 1,500 to 1,700; Scolty Hill, 1,500; and Strathfennella, a detached Grampian, from 1,200 to 1,500, above the level of the sea. The county in its more level parts is highly embellished by the country seats of its numerous resident proprietors, each amid its own thriving woodland.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—The most considerable rivers connected with this county are the Dee, the North Esk, the Cowie, the Bervie, and the Carron. The Dee glides for eight or ten miles through the northern limb of the shire; the North Esk is a boundary river on the south-west, for about ten miles; the Cowie has a course of ten miles through the county, previous to its falling into the sea at Stonehaven, where also the Carron empties itself; and the Bervie, after a progress of sixteen miles, discharges itself into the sea at the town to which it imparts its name. The Luther water can only be mentioned as a tributary stream to the North Esk. The only railway line passing through Kincardineshire is the Aberdeen, which communicates on the north with the city of that name, and on the south with Edinburgh and various other places. In this county it passes through or near to the towns of Stonehaven, Laurencekirk and Marykirk, Drumlithie, Port Leithan and Auchinblae.

DIVISION, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Kincardineshire comprises eighteen parishes and three parts of parishes: it contains within its limits a royal burgh—Bervie and a burgh of barony, Stonehaven, besides several smaller towns and villages. Bervie, in connexion with Montrose, Arbroath, Brechin, and Forfar returns one member to the imperial parliament, and the county at large another.

Note.—(a) Banchory-Davenick is partly in Aberdeenshire; the entire parish contains 811 inhabitants.

(b) The parish of Drumcok is chiefly in Aberdeenshire; the whole contains 811 inhabitants.

(c) The greater part of Edzell parish is in Forfarshire; the entire population is 1,064.

The total annual value of Real Property, in Kincardineshire; as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £94,961; and the amount assessed to the Property Tax, in 1843, to £142,549 18s. 11d.

AUCHINBLAE AND FORDOUN.

AUCHINBLAE, the capital of the parish of Fordoun, is a thriving inland market town, pleasantly situated on the banks of the Luther water, 26 miles S. by W. from Aberdeen, 16 N. from Montrose, 11 S.W. from Stonehaven, 6 from Fettercairn, 5 from Laurencekirk, and 2½ from the Fordoun station on the Aberdeen railway. The principal trade of the place is flax-spinning by power, which was established so early as 1795, being the second attempt of the kind in Scotland. The weaving of linens by the hand-loom has been entirely given up, within the last ten years. A branch of the North of Scotland Banking Company was established in 1837, a Savings' Bank in 1815—which latter was converted into a National Security Savings Bank in 1842; and the town was lighted by gas in 1840. In consequence of the salubrity and pureness of the air, and the many beautiful and romantic walks in the immediate neighbourhood, it is much frequented during summer by families from the sea-coast towns of Arbroath, Montrose, Stonehaven and Aberdeen. In the western part of the parish, about a mile north-east from Fettercairn, is a small assemblage of tenements, being all that exists of the former county-town, Kincardine; and among these buildings, or in their vicinity, stood the court-house. It ceased to be the chief town in the reign of James VI. when Stonehaven, as a more convenient situation for holding the county court, obtained that distinction. In the vicinity are the remains of the castle or royal palace of Kincardine. There are no records stating the period when this castle was built, or when it was last inhabited, but it appears to have been a royal residence previous to the death of Kenneth III. in 994—for it was occupied by that monarch at the time of his murder by Finella. It stands on the termination of a small ridge, at an elevation of about sixty or eighty feet above the adjoining plain, and has a very commanding view of the most beautiful part of the Howe of the Mearns. It was in this palace, as Lord Hiles writes, that John Balliol resigned his crown to Edward I. of England, July 2nd, 1296; and he quotes the record of this in Rhymer's Fæderes. As this is the last event of importance on record connected with the history of this palace, it is not improbable that it was destroyed in the wars between the Scotch and English which followed that event. Near to Fordoun House are distinct vestiges of a Roman encampment; and on the hill above Newland there are the remains of a Druidical temple. About a mile west of Drumtochty Castle, in a retired and secluded glen, are the foundations of a small triary; and near to that is a fine spring, considered to be among the most copious flowing in Scotland. The parish extends, from east to west, ten miles, and in breadth about seven; the southern part is level, but the north is mountainous, having a thin soil, and inferior in fertility to the lower part. The present parish church, erected in 1829, and placed on a high rock in one of the most beautiful spots in the parish, is a large handsome edifice, in the Gothic style, with a Gothic tower on the west end, rising to about one hundred feet in height; and in a valley between where it stands and the town of Auchinblae is situated the free church, a neat well-finished building, but much smaller and of much humbler pretensions than its more aristocratic neighbour, perched on the rock. A weekly market for the sale of cattle and grain, is held on Friday from October to the end of April; and annual fairs for the sale of cattle and the hiring of agricultural labourers, on the third Thursday of April (Paschal), on Wednesday after the second Tuesday of May (old style); the 26th of May (hiring); the second Wednesday in June (Cammock); the first Wednesday, in July (old style); on the day after Kincardine O'Neil in September; and on the 22nd November (hiring).

BANCHORY-DAVENICK,

WITH PORT-LEITHEN AND HILLSIDE, MARYCULTER, AND NIGG WITH TORRY.

BANCHORY parish lies on both sides the river Dee, near its confluence with the sea, and is partly in the county of Kincardine and partly in that of Aberdeen. The parish, which is for the most rugged, heathy and stony, extends about six miles along the river, with one extremity bounded by the sea: it contains the two small villages of HILLSIDE and PORT-LEITHEN—the latter near the promontory of Girdleness. The Aberdeen railway intersects the parish.

MARYCULTER lies on the south side of the Dee, extending from that river to the Grampians; it is of an oblong form, being six miles in length by two in breadth. The whole parish is rocky, and the surface of the land encumbered with large stones which are a great obstacle to agricultural improvements. The district is well wooded, and here and there are to be seen some thriving plantations.

NIGG parish is situated at the extreme north-east corner of the county, near the termination of the ridge of the Grampian mountains. It is bounded by the Dee on the north which separates it from Aberdeen on the east, and on the south and west by Banchory-Davenick; it extends four miles in length by two in breadth. The coast is bold and rocky; the north-east point, called Girdleness, is a remarkable promontory, forming the south side of the estuary of the Dee. There is a small bay called the Bay of Nigg, at the head of which stands the parish church. The district contains the fishing village of TORRY, which has a small harbour and pier.

BANCHORY-TERNAN, DURRIS, AND STRACHAN.

BANCHORY-TERNAN is a parish lying on the banks of the Dee, further up that river than Banchory-Davenick; it is bounded by Strachan on the south, Durris on the east, and Mid-Mar on the north. The village stands on the north side of the Dee, at a distance of 18 miles s.w. from Aberdeen. In the parish are two or three lochs, in one of which is an artificial island bearing the ruins of an old mansion. The parish church, rather handsome, and a neat free church are the places of worship.

DURRIS parish which extends about eight miles in length, by five and a half in breadth, lies on the south side of the Dee, from which the ground rises, and terminates in the ridge of the Grampian mountains. A great part of the parish has been enclosed and great improvements effected. The parish is bounded by Maryculter and Fetteresso on the east, and Strachan and Banchory-Ternan on the west; from the latter Durris is about six miles distant. There are several lofty mountains in this district.

STRACHAN parish is bounded on the east by Durris, Gleubervie, and Fordoun, on the south also by the latter parish and Fettercairn, on the west by Lochlee, and on the north by Banchory-Ternan: it extends eleven miles in length, by from five to seven in breadth, and is for the greater proportion a mass of hills; some of which belong to the range of the Grampians, Clachnabane, more than two thousand three hundred feet high, rises within the parish. The land of which is low towards the north, on which quarter it is bounded by the Dee and its tributaries, and here it is tolerably well cultivated, and some of it planted.

MAIL.

To ABERDEEN and BALLATER, the Royal Mail, every morning at nine

BERVIE,

WITH THE VILLAGES AND PARISHES OF GOURDON, ARBUTHNOT, AND KINNEFF, WITH CATTERLINE.

BERVIE, (or INVERBERVIE as it is frequently written), is a royal burgh, the capital of its parish, and the chief town for many miles; 13 miles N. by E. from Montrose, 10 s. from Stonehaven, and 25 s. from Aberdeen; eligibly situated on the coast road from the last-named city to Dundee, and at the mouth of the Bervie, which river is crossed by a good bridge of a single arch, spanning one hundred and three feet. At the mouth of the river is a small basin which opens into an extensive bay, navigable for any vessel almost at any time. This basin could easily be converted into a very commodious and safe harbour, which would be the means of augmenting the general commerce of the place, and revive the fisheries on the coast. It is mentioned by some of the oldest inhabitants, that the city of Aberdeen, aware of the advantages that would arise from a place so admirably adapted by nature for a harbour, but entirely neglected by art, made overtures to the council of this burgh, some considerable time ago, to construct a harbour at their own expense, on certain conditions, but which were not acceded to. The principal trade of the town is the weaving of linen cloth and spinning linen; on the banks of the Bervie there are five mills employed in the latter operation, besides a meal and a woollen mill; and as a grain mart, Bervie is conspicuous. Bervie is admirably adapted for the purpose of manufactures to any extent; the river is a fine stream, and in the driest season it has always abundance of water; it runs through a large valley, in which the first mill that was ever erected for spinning of flax in Scotland stands. The town is well lighted with gas.

Bervie was constituted a royal burgh by charter, from King David II., as a return for the kindness and hospitality with which he was received by the poor inhabitants, when he was forced in here by stress of weather; the place on which he landed is still called Craig David. James VI. renewed the charter, confirming all the privileges and immunities granted by David. The burgh is governed by a provost, two baillies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and nine councillors—it joins with Montrose, Arbuthnot, Brechin, and Forfar, in returning one member to parliament. The sheriff's small debt-court is held at Bervie on the third Mondays in January, April, July, and October. The places of worship are, a church of the establishment, a free church, and a chapel for independents. The first-mentioned is a handsome modern building of Gothic architecture, and is the principal ornament of the town. The weekly market, considerable for grain, as before stated, is held on Wednesday, and the fairs on the Wednesday before the 13th of February, the Thursday before the 19th of May and September, the Wednesday before old Martinmas, and the Wednesday before old Christmas day. GOURDON fishing village is one mile from Bervie.

ARBUTHNOT parish is of an irregular triangular form, nearly five miles in length, bounded on the west by Fordoun, or the great hollow of the Meams, the streams Bervie and Forth forming this line of division, and on the north-east by Glenbervie and Kinneff. The celebrated Dr. Arbuthnot, the intimate friend of Pope and Swift was the son of the minister and a native of this parish. Arbuthnot gives the title of Viscount to an ancient family of the same name, which became distinguished in the twelfth century. Sir Robert Arbuthnot for loyalty to Charles I. was created a Baron and Viscount by that monarch.

KINNEFF, with which is incorporated the abrogated parish of CATTERLINE, lies on the sea coast south from Dunnottar, and bounded by Arbuthnot on the west, and Bervie on the south. It extends from the water of Bervie to the northern point about five miles along the coast, which is exceedingly bold and rocky. Upon the margin of the sea, not above a hundred yards distance from the church, are to be seen the ruins of a castle from which it is supposed the parish has taken its name; and tradition assigns it has having been the residence of a Scottish monarch, named Kenneth.

POST OFFICE, BERVIE, William Mollison, Post Master.—Letters from EDINBURGH, MONTROSE, DUNDEE, PERTH, and places SOUTH and WEST, also from ABERDEEN, STONEHAVEN and the NORTH, arrive (from FORDOUN) every morning at a quarter-past eight, and evening at ten minutes past six, and are despatched thereto, at five minutes past six in the morning, and twenty minutes past two, afternoon.

Letters from SAINT CYRUS, &c. arrive (by horse post) every afternoon, at ten minutes before two and are despatched thereto, at twenty-five minutes before nine in the morning.

DRUMLITHIE AND GLENBERVIE.

DRUMLITHIE is a village in the parish of Glenbervie, 18 miles N. from Montrose, 7 N. by W. from Bervie, and about 6½ S. by W. from Stonehaven; situated nearly in the centre of the east side of the county, on the road from the last named town to Lau-renceburg, and is a station on the Aberdeen railway.
 The village is an assemblage of ill-built houses, so perplexingly arranged as to constitute a bewildering labyrinth. The inhabitants are principally employed in weaving linen, sheetings, &c. for the manufacturers of Aberdeen and Montrose. The parish of Glenervie extends upwards of six miles in length by a breadth of three at some parts, and five at others. The soil in the upper part of the district is a blueish clay; in the lower a dry fertile loam. The northern part of the parish lies partly among the Grampian hills. The river Bervie bounds the district partly on the west and the Carron has its source within it: the hamlet of GLENBERVIE, which stands in the vicinity of the form river, is a barony of the Douglas family. A free church and an episcopal chapel are in Drumlithie, and a church of the establishment at Glenbervie. A fair is held on the first Thursday after the second Tuesday in October.

FETTERCAIRN.

F is a parish and village—the latter 98 miles N. by E.
 from Edinburgh, 15 N. from Montrose, 14 S. W. from Stonehaven and 11 N. from Brechin: situated on a small streamlet, a tributary to the North Esk. The latter river is crossed by a romantic bridge called the 'Bridge of Gannachy,' which springs of a precipitous rock at either extremity, and is elevated to a great height above the water. The village is lighted with gas, and has the advantage of branch of the North of Scotland Bank, and there is a large distillery in the immediate vicinity. In the village square is the old cross of Kincardine, an erection of great antiquity.

About one mile west is a ruin called Fenella's Castle, connected with which is a singular tradition concerning the murder of Kenneth III. by a powerful lady named Fenella, in revenge for the death of her son, who was slain by that monarch, in rebellion. Besides the handsome parish church, there is a free church and an episcopal chapel, and two libraries are maintained within the village. The Fettercairn farmers' club, of which Mr. Valentine's secretary, comprise several contiguous parishes. The parish of Fettercairn lies at the foot of the lower range of the Grampians, and extends considerably into the means: the ground on the west is light and sharp, with a small mixture of moss; on the east it becomes deeper of a fertile clay loam. The name of the parish is derived from a stupendous cairn of stone in the neighbourhood, a mountain monument to the heroes who died in some unrecorded battle. Fairs for cattle and hiring servants are held the day before old Whit Sunday and day preceding old Martinmas.

JOHN'S HAVEN, BENHOLME AND ST. CYRUS.

JOHN'S HAVEN is a thriving sea-port village, in the parish of Benholme, 14 miles S from Stonehaven, and 4 from Bervie, situated at the bottom of a hill between the coast road and the sea, and a little off the main thoroughfare, between Aberdeen and Montrose, 29 miles S. from the former town, and 9 S. from the latter. It contains an extensive manufactory for silks, cloths, sackings, &c. which, with the weaving of linen cloths and fishing employ the majority of the inhabitants. There is also a good brewery in the village, and in its vicinity several fine kilns. The parish of Benholme forms a square of nearly three miles, lying on the shore of the German Ocean, bounded on the north by Bervie, and on the south by St. Cyrus. The land is level on the coast, and the interior consists of hill and dale: beneath the surface is deposited good freestone and limestone. The tower of Benholme, before the invention of gunpowder, was considered a strong place of defence. The places of worship are the parish kirk, a free church, and one for united presbyterians.

ST. CYRUS (sometimes called Ecclescraig), is a parish and village—the latter situated four miles from John's Haven, between the coast and the road from Montrose, which passes through the district. The parish, which measures five miles in length, by three in breadth, lies partly on the sea shore, having Benholme on the east, Garvock on the north, Marykirk on the north-west, and the North Esk river washes part of its western boundary. The surface is pretty level, but intersected with several glens and rivulets, and is elevated in some places to little hills. More than three-fourths is arable. The Burn in Don Fret forms a beautiful cascade, by falling over a rock sixty-three feet in height. The ancient residence of the Barclay family, known by the name of the Kane of Mathers, stands in ruins on a peninsulated rock, the base of which is washed by the sea. The castles of Morphy and Lamiston are also ancient buildings. The parish contains limestone quarries, and plenty of excellent freestone.

LAURENCEKIRK AND MARYKIRK.

LAURENCEKIRK, the capital of its parish, is a thriving and respectable village, 93 miles N. by E. from Edinburgh, and 10 N. from Montrose, situated on the main road from Perth to Aberdeen; and is a station on the railway to that city. This village, which was formerly but a mere hamlet, seated amidst an uncultivated tract of country, is indebted for the consequence it enjoys at the present day to Lord Gairdnerstone, a judge of the court of session, who, in the year 1772, took it under his fostering care and patronage. In 1779 he procured for the place the privileges, of a burgh of barony, with the right of holding a weekly market. The village consists of a main street, nearly a mile in length, one parallel to it and two or three short ones branching from the principal streets, the whole well lighted with gas. It is governed by a bailie and four councillors, who are chosen every three years, and regulate the police, &c. A sheriff's small debt court is held here on the first Mondays in February, June and October. A branch of the Aberdeen Town and Country Bank is established in the town, and there is a manufactory for fancy work-boxes, and wooden hinge snuff-boxes, conducted by the son of the inventor. Near the village are two extensive flax-spinning mills and for the manufacture of linens.

STONEHAVEN AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

STONEHAVEN (or Stonehive) is a sea-port, and the county town of Kincardine, 94 miles N. by E. from Edinburgh, 68 N. E. from Perth, 66 S. E. from Bunc, 35 N. by E. from Arbroath, 23 N. from Montrose, 15 S. from Aberdeen, and 10 N. of Bervie. It is situated within a mile of a station on the Aberdeen line of railway on the coast of the North Sea, at the mouth of the Carron stream, in the bottom of a bay, and flanked on both sides by lofty hills. The place, which is considerable, though not a royal burgh, is composed of an old and a new town: the former lies on the south bank of the Carron, adjacent to the harbour, in the parish of Dunnotar; the other on a peninsula or ane, formed by the Carron and the Cowie, in the parish of Fetteresso: the two towns are connected by a bridge, forming a continuation of the road from the south to Aberdeen. The new town is laid out on a regular plan, having broad streets, with a square in the centre; in this square stands a handsome market-house, erected in 1827, surmounted by a circular tower; a spacious hall, and a tavern range along the upper story, and shops beneath. The harbour is a natural basin, sheltered on the south-east by a high rock which projects into the sea, and on the north-east by a quay that affords every facility for loading or unloading vessels. The shipping of the port is chiefly employed in the coal and lime trade, and occasionally in exporting grain to Leith. During the season a herring fishery is carried on to the great advantage of the place. There are ten vessels belonging to the port, of the aggregate burthen of 700 or 800 tons. The woollen manufacture is briskly conducted by two respectable firms, and a brewery and a distillery in the vicinity are respectively large establishments. There are three banking houses, and several good inns—Melvin's Hotel, at the railway station, has superior accommodation both for families and commercial gentlemen. The sheriff's ordinary court is held every Wednesday in time of session, and a sheriff's small debt court on the same day during the sitting of the first-mentioned court. A newspaper, the 'Stonehaven Journal,' is published here every alternate Tuesday.

The established churches of Dunnotar and Fetteresso are situated near the town; there is also a free church, an united presbyterian, an episcopal and a methodist chapel. There are three cemeteries in the proximity of the town—namely, at Fetteresso and Cowie, one mile and a half respectively from the town, and at Dunnotar one mile distant; there is also at the latter distance an attractive garden open to the public. The principal object that can awaken interest in the vicinity of Stonehaven is Dunnotar Castle, about a mile and a half south of the town: it is seated on a perpendicular rock, one hundred and fifty feet above the level of the sea, about three acres in extent, and almost separated from the land by a deep chasm. The entrance is by a square tower of great strength, within high water mark; the skeleton of the structure still occupies one-half of the summit of the rock and forms one of the most majestic piles of ruins in Scotland. This castle withstood a long siege by Cromwell's army, and its ultimate surrender was upon honourable terms; it was often used as a state prison, and several of the nonconforming presbyterian clergy were compelled to be its inmates. It was built during the contest between Bruce and Baliol, by an ancestor of the Marischal family; and so great was its reputation for strength, that in 1651 it was selected for the depository of the regalia of Scotland, to secure them from capture by the English army. It was dismantled shortly after the civil war of 1715, when its proprietor, James, Earl Marischal, was attainted for high treason: since that period (the direct line of succession having failed), the castle has become by purchase the property of the nearest heir male, Sir Alexander Keith, of Dunnotar and Ravelston, Knight Marischal of Scotland. Though dismantled, the stone-work of the fortress is yet pretty entire, there being in general nothing wanting except the roof and the floors; the battlements, the formidable towers and airy turrets (full of loop-holes for the archer and musketeer), the hall for the banquet and the cell for the captive, are all alike entire, and their respective limits and divisions distinct.

KINROSS-SHIRE.

THIS is a small inland county, situated on the western boundary of Fifeshire, towards its south-western quarter—from which it was severed in the year 1426; Fife also bounds it on the southern side, and Perthshire lies on its northern and on its western limits. At the revolution, Kinross being considered too small a county as it then stood, was enlarged by the addition of Orwell, Blieth, and Tulliebole, which parishes, before that period, formed a portion of Fifeshire. The general figure of the county is somewhat circular, although the line of its boundary is very irregular. It extends from east to west eleven miles, or rather more; and from north to south about nine miles and a half. The total superficies of the county amount to seventy-two square miles of land, and seven of lakes; of cultivated land about 27,700 acres, and of uncultivated about 18,400 acres. This is the smallest of the Scottish counties except Clackmannan, and in population numbers the least except Selkirk. Its name is significant of its local situation, importing the 'head of the peninsula.'

SOIL, SURFACE, PRODUCE, &c.—The boundaries or outskirts of the county are generally hilly; and the shire may be described as an open vale or plain, environed by uplands and hills. The Ochill hills, which separate the district from Strathearn, are the northern boundary; the Lomond hills are the eastern, Benarty hill the south-eastern, and Cleish hills the south and south-western; these eminences are generally pastoral, and are adapted for the rearing of cattle; but they are likewise, in several places, suited to cultivation, and exhibit many pleasing and productive arable fields. The original condition of Ross resembled that of the contiguous county of Fife, having been of a moory, mossy nature. Up to a comparatively recent epoch, the lands were bleak and unreclaimed—a circumstance partly attributable to a certain local characteristic, namely: the district has the remarkable peculiarity in its proprietary of being much divided into farms, each owned in feu by its tenant; there are, in consequence, more resident lairds in proportion to its extent, in this part of the country, than are to be found in any other division of Scotland. The farms, it appears, were feued about the commencement of the eighteenth century, from the house of Kinross to the tenants then in possession, whose descendants inherit the properties, paying for them an exceedingly trifling duty or quit-rent. The marches of the various farms not having been accurately defined, and being more confused by the practice of 'run-rig,' it was long before the county manifested any very active signs of improvement. Within the recollection of persons of middle life, few districts were worse cultivated or less profitable than Kinross-shire; but the prime minister Pitt's institution of rack-rent taxation, in conjunction with other circumstances (among which undoubtedly may be included the good example exhibited by neighbouring agriculturists), ultimately induced a spirited change; and now the progress of agriculture—the mode of draining, enclosing and planting—can compete with those of Fife, or most other districts: drainage, on an extensive and effectual system, has been carried into operation on the Carse east from Loch Leven, and on its margin; in all directions, in this particular quarter, productive arable fields present themselves, where, only comparatively a few years ago, nothing met the view but desolate moors and sombre mosses. At this day many good roads intersect the shire, and various parts of it are sheltered by thriving comfort-inspiring plantations. The mineralogy of Kinross-shire is a subject of limited importance: although coal abounds in some localities, no works for raising it have yet been established; whinstone has been found in various parishes—so has sandstone, of the best quality; of limestone there is plenty, and it has been wrought profitably.

RIVERS, LAKES AND RAILWAYS.—There are no rivers of magnitude in this county; the only ones that can be named are the Gairney, on the south boundary of Kinross parish; the South Quelch, that runs below the town of Kinross, and the North Quelch, on the north boundary of the parish—all which, and a few rivulets beside, discharge themselves into Loch Leven. This beautiful and noble expanse of water (which we shall have to notice particularly under Kinross town), lies at the east end of a wide vale, and nearly in the centre of the county; the small river Leven issues from it, and pursues an easterly course through Fifeshire. Besides Loch Leven, there are a few minor lakes, or (as they are popularly termed) tarns, on the eminences above Cleish. RAILWAYS.—A branch of the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee line passes about eight miles from Kinross town, on its route to Dunfermline.

KINROSS-SHIRE comprises only four complete parishes, and three parts of parishes; it possesses only one town, Kinross—with a large populous village in its neighbourhood, called Milnathort. The county, which has no parliamentary burgh, joins with Clackmannanshire in returning one member to the imperial parliament.

KINROSS, MILNATHORT AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KINROSS, the capital of its county and parish, is a town of considerable antiquity, 27 miles N. from Edinburgh, 19 S. W. from Cupar Fife, 17 S. from Perth, and 10 N. from Dundee, which last-named town is approached by a branch line from the Edinburgh, Fife and Dundee railway. The town occupies a pleasant site at the foot of the open vale to which it gives name, on the north-western shore of Loch Leven. It formerly consisted of a number of sinuous lanes, composed of buildings of antique appearance, bordering on the lake; in later times it has undergone many extensive improvements in the erection of new houses, particularly in the main street, through which is the road to the north. In this street are the principal inns and shops. The principal trade here consists of the manufacture of woollen goods, and there are several agents for this business. Breweries, several corn mills, and the usual domestic trades, comprise the other branches. At the capital of the county, the courts of the sheriffs sit here every Tuesday during session, and justice of peace courts are held monthly. A few years ago a spacious town hall was erected by subscription, on the site of the old parish church. The places of worship are the parish church, a handsome erection of modern date; a free church, and two chapels for united presbyterians.

Originally the vicinity of Kinross was dignified by a castle of great strength, situated on a promontory jutting into the lake, and of which the town was a dependence. This ancient stronghold, long the residence of the Earls of Morton, was removed upwards of a century ago, and the promontory is now occupied by Kinross House, a structure designed and built by Sir William Bruce, the architect of the modern part of Holyrood House, and many other mansions, in the style of the time of Charles II. The environs of the town derive much of their beauty from the pleasure grounds and exuberant plantations around this edifice, which stands near the northern entrance to the town, and opposite to the island and castle of Queen Mary, on Loch Leven. This noble sheet of water is ten miles in circumference, and contains four islands; the largest of which occupies about forty-eight English acres—upon this latter stood the ancient priory of St. Serf (or St. Servanus), of which only a fragment now remains. On another stand the ruins of the Castle of Loch Leven, once the seat of the Douglasses, and in recent times rendered celebrated by Sir Walter Scott, as the scene in his novel of the 'Abbot.' Here the unfortunate Queen Mary was confined; and a bunch of keys, supposed to be those which the Queen threw into the loch, when she escaped, was found a few years ago, and deposited in the antiquarian museum at Edinburgh. The place where the Queen landed, upon her escape from this island castle, May 2nd, 1568, was on the south side of the lake, and is still pointed out by the inhabitants to the numerous visitors who frequent this place in the summer time. There is a fine walk by the side of the water, which is much resorted to in fine weather. The loch is well stocked with trout of a red colour and fine quality, eels, perch, pike, &c. A market, principally for corn, is held on Wednesday, and fairs on the third Wednesday in March, June 1st, the third Wednesday in July, and October 18th.

MILNATHORT, popularly designated Hills o' Forth, is a considerable village in the parish of Orwell, one mile north-east from Kinross; it is neatly built, and is one of the most thriving and industrious villages within an extensive circuit: the inhabitants are chiefly engaged in weaving. The greater part of Orwell parish is fine arable land, well enclosed and planted, rising from the low shore of Loch Leven and the vale of Kinross, towards the north, in which direction it is hilly. On the Low ground, towards the lake, stands the ancient ruined castle of Burleigh, formerly the residence of the Lords Burleigh. A church of the establishment, a free church, and an united presbyterian chapel, are the places of worship. A corn market is held on the same day as that at Kinross. Fairs the second Monday in February, the last Tuesday in April (old style), July 9th, August 29th, November 5th, and the Monday next before Christmas Day.

POST OFFICE, KINROSS, Janet Simpson, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive every forenoon at five minutes past eleven, and are despatched at half-past four in the morning.

POST OFFICE, MILNATHORT, Joseph Thomson, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Kinross) daily at a quarter past twelve noon, and are despatched thereto at half-past eight in the morning.

KIRKCUDBRIGHTSHIRE,

COMMONLY called a STEWARTRY, but in reality and to all intents and purposes a sheriffdom or shire, lies on the south of Scotland, and forms the eastern and by far the most extensive portion of the ancient district of Galloway. It is bounded by Dumfries-shire on the east and north-east; on the south by the Solway Frith and the Irish Sea; by the county of Ayr on the north and north-west, and by Wigtonshire (or Western Galloway) and Wigton bay on the west. In extent it measures, from south-east to north-west, about forty-four miles, by a breadth varying from twenty to thirty miles, the narrowest part being on the north and towards its north-western limits: it comprises a superficies of 834 square miles, or 525,760 statute acres, including twelve square miles of lakes: about one-third of the whole surface may be said to be brought into cultivation.

EARLY HISTORY.—It appears that the denomination of 'stewartry' originated at the period when, by the forfeiture of the possessions of the Baliols, the Cummins, and their various vassals, this district became the property of the Crown, when it is understood to have been first put under the authority of a royal STEWART; in subsequent times the office of steward, in the appointment of the king, was one of much honour, and was often the subject of contest. For a considerable lapse of time, however, after the establishment of a separate stewardship, the district was still in some measure esteemed to be politically attached to Dumfries-shire, but this nominal connexion was formally dissolved before the civil wars in the reign of Charles I. From the force of ancient usage, the appellation of steward, instead of that of sheriff, has, down to the present day, been popularly continued, although, by the civil arrangements of modern times, there is not the least difference in the two offices. Events in early times, possessing considerable interest, are more immediately connected with Kirkcudbright, its capital—which was frequently visited by, and occasionally became the abode of, royalty. Edward I. spent some time there during the warfare of 1300; and in 1455 it was visited by James II. in the course of his march through Galloway. A few years later, in 1461, Henry VI. with his queen and court, fled thither after his defeat at Towton; and in 1508 James IV. was hospitably entertained in that town.

SOIL, SURFACE, PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The soil of the county is principally composed of a thin mould, or a brownish loam mixed with sand—and is incumbent sometimes on gravel, and in many places on rock; the whole surface is interspersed with meadows, and mingled with moss. The shire has no statistical subdivisions, except that four of the most northerly parishes—Carsphairn, Dalry, Kells and Balmaclellan—are commonly designated the district of 'Glenkins.' The aspect of the country, however, forms a very natural distinction into two divisions: if a line be drawn from the centre of Kirkpatrick-Iron-Gray parish to the Gatehouse of Fleet, all to the north-west, with little exception, is so mountainous, that it may with propriety be termed a Highland district; while the south and east parts exhibit a fine champaign and cultivated country—a contrast strikingly obvious. The principal eminences in the shire are, Criffill (or Crawford), 1,400 feet; Cairnsmuir, 1,728; Bencairn, 1,200, and Cairn, 1,000, above the level of the sea. Anciently the greater proportion of the land was covered with a forest, which is now eradicated, or to be traced only in trifling remnants on the banks of the streams. It appears that, so early as the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, this hilly territory was under a productive process of agriculture, originated and improved by the assiduity of the monks of the different abbeys in the district; and it is upon record that in the memorable year 1300, when Edward I. subdued Galloway, he caused considerable quantities of wheat to be exported from the harbour of Kirkcudbright to Cumberland, and even to Dublin, to be manufactured into flour, in which state it was brought back to victual the various strongholds and castles held by that monarch. In these times the staple products were wheat and oats—the culture of barley, pease and beans being very limited. This age of agricultural prosperity was succeeded by destructive intestine wars, fanaticism, improvidence, and consequent misery, which lasted four hundred years, and reduced the country to a desert. It was not until the beginning of the eighteenth century that any measures were adopted to effect a rescuscitation of its agricultural capabilities, which for so long a period had lain dormant. The enclosure of the land with fences was the first attempt at a series of improvements; but this judicious preliminary was encountered by a riotous opposition from the rural population, who rose in considerable numbers, under the title of 'levellers,' and proceeded to demolish the newly-formed boundaries, under the influence of some extravagantly wild notions as to a natural general right in property; and they were not subdued until the most energetic measures were employed for that purpose: this mischievous result of ignorance having been overcome, however, and the 'levelling' delusion dissipated, the county steadily advanced in an accelerated progress of improvement; and towards the close of the same century the district could compete with Dumfries and other adjacent shires in agricultural prosperity. Planting has been introduced by several noblemen and gentlemen of the stewartry, and much has been accomplished in reclaiming moss-lands. The number of horses, cattle, and sheep reared in the county is sufficiently large to evince the possession of much practical knowledge, and consequent success, in this branch of productive economy; and the breed of swine has increased to a prodigious extent, these animals being now a staple commodity both for home consumption and exportation. The district is very nearly destitute of coal, which, as well as the greater part of the lime used, is brought from Cumberland; and there is very little freestone. Marl is found in great plenty, especially in the loch of Carlinwark, which contains an inexhaustible store of the best shell-marl; ironstone and lead ore also abound, but the deficiency of coal presents an obstruction to either being made available for the smelting process. Besides the salmon-fishings at the mouths of the rivers, the Solway Frith affords every opportunity for the capture of the inhabitants of the deep. The manufacture of linen, woollen, and cotton goods engages a considerable number of hands in the towns and villages.

RIVERS, &c.—Like other mountainous countries, this is intersected by numerous streams, which, uniting, form four considerable rivers; these are—the Dee, the Ken, the Cree, and the Urr. The Ken is considered the largest, receiving in its course numerous rivulets which drain the neighbouring hills, and even affording an asylum to the waters of the Dee, although the latter assumes the appellative privilege after entering the Ken. All these rivers rise in the north, and empty themselves into the Solway Frith or the Irish Sea. The smaller streams are the Fleet, the Tarf, the Deogh, and the Cluden. The Solway Frith, in a circular form, washes the coast of the stewartry, from the Nith to the Cree, a space of forty-five miles; and along the shore of this beneficial estuary the coast is bold and rocky, the cliffs in some instances rising to a great height.

The shire, or stewartry, comprises twenty-eight parishes, and contains two royal burghs—Kirkcubright and New Galloway; the latter, in conjunction with Wigtown, Stranraer, and Whithorn (in Wigtownshire), sends one member to parliament; and the Stewartry, like the other counties of Scotland, returns another representative.

AUCHENCAIRN AND DUNDRENNAN IN RERWICK.

AUCHENCAIRN, the principal village in the parish of Rerwick, is 18 miles from Castle Douglas, 14 E. from Kirkcubright, and 22 S. W. from Dundries; situated on the main road between the two last named towns. In the mouth of Auchencairn bay lies the small island of HESTON, which stands high out of the water, and affords excellent pasture for sheep, and there are rabbits in great numbers. A fair is held on the first Monday after the 16th of August.

DUNDRENNAN is a small village in the same parish as Auchencairn, four miles thierfrom, deriving its chief, indeed only, importance from having in its vicinity the ruined abbey of Dundrennan, the greatest attraction in this part of the country. This abbey, the venerable remains of which stand about a mile and a half from the sea, was founded by Fergus, Lord of Galloway. In the year 1142. The church was built, as usual, in the form of a cross, with the spire rising two hundred feet from the centre. The body was one hundred and twenty feet in length; and on the south side of the church were the cloisters, with a grass plot in the centre. From what remains of the edifice, the whole must have been built in a style of great taste and architectural beauty. The buildings are now greatly dilapidated, and are almost entirely covered with a pale gray-coloured moss, which gives a character of peculiar and almost airy lightness to the lofty columns and gothic arches, many of which are entire. This sacred edifice afforded a temporary shelter to Mary Stuart during the last hours she spent in Scotland. Tradition has traced with accuracy her course from Langside to the scene of her embarkation for England. She arrived at this spot in the evening, and spent her last night within the walls of the monastery, then a magnificent and extensive building. The spot where she took boat next morning for the English side of the Solway is at the nearest point of the coast; the road from the religious establishment thither runs through a secluded valley of surpassing beauty, and leads directly to the shore, where the rock is still pointed out by the peasantry from which the hapless queen embarked on her death-determined voyage; it is situated in a little creek, surrounded by vast and precipitous rocks, and called 'Port Mary,' in commemoration of the event. The scene is analogously wild and sublime; and besides being inspirational of melancholy associations in the mind of the poet or romantic tourist, the coast here and in the neighbourhood merits the attention of the painter and the investigation of the mineralogist.

POST OFFICE, AUCHENCAIRN, Mary Kissock, Post Mistress. Letters from all parts arrive (from CASTLE DOUGLAS) every morning at ten minutes past five, and are despatched thereto at seven in the morning.

CASTLE DOUGLAS IN KELTON,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF KELTON-HILL, GILSTON AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CASTLE DOUGLAS is a modern, neat, thriving town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Kelton; 90 miles s s w. from Edinburgh, 18 w. by s. from Dumfries, 15 n.e. from Garehouse, and 10 n.n.e. from Kirkcudbright; situated in the road between the two latter towns, and on that from Portpatrick to Carlisle. In a pleasant fertile district, on the banks of the Carlinwark water, from which lake the original name of the place was derived. In 1792 it was erected by the proprietor into a burgh of barony by its present appellation, and its government vested in a provost, two bailiffs, and seven councillors. Seventy years ago it was composed of but a few detached houses; it has now upwards of four hundred and fifty respectable dwellings, laid out in regular streets, the principal one lining the public road. Altogether Castle Douglas may be considered one of the most respectable and prosperous little towns, although not of remote origin, in the south of Scotland. In the town-house, which is a modern commodious edifice, with a good clock, a court is held on the first Monday, monthly, for the recovery of small debts. There are three principal inns, and several others of a respectable character, but less elevated pretensions. On the south-west side of the town are the ruins of the ancient Castle of Threave; and on its south-eastern quarter stands the modern and elegant mansion of Gilston Castle (formerly called Douglas Castle), now the residence of Mrs. Maitland. Carlinwark lake, before mentioned, is upwards of a mile in length, and occupies one hundred and eighteen acres; before it was partially drained, however, by the canal cut from it to the river Dee, its area was much greater. It contains a number of small islands, one of which, in the middle of the lake, has been bound round its base with huge frames of oak; but whether the island has been artificially formed upon them, as some think, or they have been placed there with intent to support some vast superstructure, cannot now be decided. The lake is plentifully stored with pike and perch, and at its bottom is an inexhaustible treasure of the best shell marl.

Nearly a mile beyond the lake, towards Kelton, stands the established church frequented by the inhabitants of Castle Douglas and neighbourhood, which with its burying ground at a short distance below the hill, are noted for their slovenly appearance; near the church is Kelton Manse, now occupied by the Rev. Samuel C. wan. A parochial school, and one connected with the free church, are in Douglas. Castle Douglas and its vicinity appear to have been the arena of much contest during the feudal system. when the ancient Douglas-Jewell in the castle of Threave and were lords of this district; for on the west side of the town are still visible encampments and breast-works, evidently thrown up against the castle; and on the south-west bank of the lake is a spot still termed the 'gallows plot' or 'plot,' said to have been the place of execution in former times. Near the head of the lake before noticed lived, it is said, three brothers, by trade smiths; they made the large cannon called 'Mous Meg,' shown at Edinburgh Castle: it was forced in staves, and hooped round like a cask. The market, a large one, for grain in winter, and cattle in summer, is held on Monday: the grain is sold monthly by sample, and exported, some to England and some to the north of Scotland. Fairs February 11th, or the following Monday, for horses; the last Monday in March for hiring servants: September 23rd, or the following Monday, for hiring and for horses, and November 13th, or the following Monday for horses.

KELTON-HILL (or Roan house), is a small village in the same parish as, and about two miles and a half from Castle Douglas. Of the extensive horse fairs, formerly held here, only one is now maintained—the others being transferred to its more fortunate neighbourhood Castle Douglas. The fair still retained is held June 17th (old style), or the following Tuesday, and is a considerable one for horses and hiring harvest servants.

Nearly two miles from Carlinwark lake, in Kelton parish, is the small village of GILSTON, and its castle, formerly called Douglas Castle, and then the seat of the proprietor, Sir William Douglas, the founder of Castle Douglas. The present building, modern and elegant, is the residence of Mrs. Maitland. About two miles on the road towards Kirkcudbright, is a small village called the BRIDGE OF DEE, of little, if any note, but that obtained from the number of Irish, there located and being the scene of frequent unseemly broils

CREETOWN.

Is a small town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Kirkmabreck, 117 miles s. w. from Edinburgh, twelve w. from Gatehouse, about 6 s.e. from Newton-Stewart, and three from Wigton, across the ferry. It was formerly called Ferry-Town of Cree, and derived that appellation, doubtless, from its situation—the town being seated on the east side of the creek of the river Cree, at the head of Wigton bay, and opposite the peninsula, on which stands the town of Wigton. It is a place of but little consequence as connected with commerce, the only trade it possesses being almost confined to the importation of coal and lime, and the exportation of grain and granite; the latter of which is wrought by the trustees of the Liverpool docks, from a fine quarry contiguous. The mail road from Portpatrick to Dumfries passes through the town, which circumstance conduces, in some degree, to its importance. This place is the property of John M'Culloch, Esq. whose mansion is a great ornament to it; and there are some few other handsome residences in the neighbourhood. The church, erected in 1834, is a neat building; connected with it is a public school.

CROSSMICHAEL AND PARTON.

CROSSMICHAEL is a parish and village—the latter a small one, 91 miles s.s.w. from Edinburgh, 19 s.w. from Dumfries, and 9 s.s.e. from New Galloway; pleasantly situated on the banks of the Dee, which river is crossed, about a mile and a half from the village, by an elegant stone bridge, over which passes the high road leading to Lawrieston and Castle Douglas; Cross-michael being distant five miles from the former town and three and a half from the latter. In the village is the parish church, the patron saint of which, prior to the reformation, was Saint Michael, and hence the name, though of the cross there are neither remains or traditions preserved. The parish lies nearly in the centre of the stewartry, having the Urr water on the east, and the Dee or Loch Ken on the west. Two small lakes which have an outlet to the Dee water furnish good perch and pike fishing. A fair is held on the 29th October if it falls on a Thursday, if not, then on the Thursday after.

PARTON parish lies along the banks of the Dec, that water and the Urr being its western boundary; it extends from six to seven miles in length; its breadth varying from four to six. A large portion of the parish is hilly, heathy, and pastoral, especially in the northern quarter—towards the Dee the land is flat and arable, and under cultivation. What may be called the village, which contains but a few houses, the church (a neat building erected in 1834), and the manse, is about three miles from Cross-michael. The manse occupies a very pleasant situation fronting the river, and is surrounded by hills and wood. In the vicinity is an excellent slate quarry.

DALBEATTIE-IN-URR AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

DALBEATTIE, the principal village in the parish of Urr, is 87 miles S.S.W. from Edinburgh, 13½ N. by E. from Kirkcudbright, the like distance S.W. from Dumfries, and 6 from Castle Douglas, most eligibly situated on the Dalbeattie burn, a rivulet which falls into the water of Urr; which latter is here navigable for vessels of seventy or eighty tons. This harbour, which is called Dub-o'-Hass, is about five miles from the Solway firth, and is now being greatly improved. The village possesses great advantages, in respect to situation, for a maritime trade, having a communication by sea with the western ports, and it possesses some large falls of water, capable of turning any kind of machinery. The mills now in operation are a paper, a flax, a corn and a walk mill, and two for sawing timber—the whole propelled by water; there is also an extensive smithy, the hammers of which are also worked by the same power. In the village are places of worship for presbyterians and Roman catholics, and a comfortable inn. About 4 miles N.E. from Dalbeattie is Corra Castle, formerly the residence of Lord Herries, but now the property of the Maxwells, of Terregles. It is a fine old ruin, and mentioned as the place where Mary Queen of Scots passed a night on her way for embarkation at the Solway Firth to England, after the battle of Langside moor: the remains of the bed in which she slept is still in Terregles house. Within the parish, on the banks of the river, about a mile below Urr church, is the Mote of Urr, an artificial mount rising from the centre of elevated cricles, and used in primitive times as a court of judicature by the petty chiefs of this district of Galloway.

POST OFFICE, DALBEATTIE, Sarah M'Nish, Post Mistress.—Letters from various places arrive (from DUMFRIES) every morning at a quarter before ten, and from KIRKCUDBRIGHT at four in the afternoon, and are despatched to those towns immediately after.

Letters from DUMFRIES and various places SOUTH and EAST arrive every afternoon at half past one, and are despatched at ten in the morning.

GATEHOUSE-OF-FLEET AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

GATEHOUSE is a neat modern town partly in the parish of Anworth, but chiefly in that of Girthon, 105 mile. s. s. w. from Edinburgh, 50 e. from Portpatrick, 33 s. w. from Dumfries, and 8 w. from Kirkcudbright; charmingly seated in a romantic and fertile vale, embosomed within hills and lofty eminences, which form a spacious and delightful amphitheatre. Some of the hills have their sides clothed, and their summits crowned with woods, interspersed with rich pasturage; while the higher and more distant mountains penetrate the clouds. The town is well built, regular, and clean, the houses being generally of the same height, the streets running in straight lines, and crossing each other at right angles. A good stone bridge crosses the Fleet, connecting the principal part of the town with that in Anworth parish. At the foot of the town flows the small river Fleet, which here meets the tide, and becomes navigable for vessels of sixty tons burthen; and the navigation of the river has been considerably improved by the late Mr. Murray, who, at a cost of £3000 cut a canal in a straight line, which, besides deepening the river, reclaimed many acres of land, since which a commodious quay has been constructed by Mr. McAdam, at an expense of £600, and he has received the thanks of the ship owners of Kirkcudbright for his spirited enterprise by which their shipping has been so greatly benefited. The exports of Gatehouse are principally grain; and its imports lime and coal; but the chief business is the spinning and manufacture of cotton goods, by water power, by which also two saw mills are propelled. Mines of lead and copper have been discovered in the neighbourhood, which have been wrought to some advantage. Gatehouse was erected into a burgh of barony in 1795, through the interest of the late Mr. Murray. Its municipal government is vested in a provost, two bailies, and four councillors. A burgh court for the recovery of small debts not exceeding five pounds, is held every fortnight, and a justice of peace court sits every month for the parishes of Girthon and Anworth.

The parish church which is a commodious building, was erected in 1817, and its site well chosen. The free church, at the other end of the town, is also a spacious and handsome building and contiguous to it is a chapel for the united presbyterians. A good parochial school is well attended, and a news room and library, and a masonic lodge have their respective members and supporters. In this neighbourhood, in the parish of Anworth, are the ancient castles of Ruco and Cardoness; a mile south of the town stands Cally, the noble residence of the proprietor, Mr. Murray; and at the distance of about two miles, are the neat villas of Ardwall and Cardoness. The market is held on Saturday; and fairs on the first Monday after the 17th of June (old style), and a cattle market, or fair, commencing on the third Saturday in September, and continuing on that day for eight weeks.

POST OFFICE, High street, GATEHOUSE, Samuel Blythe, Post Master. Letters from LONDON and the SOUTH and from EDINBURGH and the NORTH, arrive every afternoon, at a quarter-past three, and are despatched at half-past eight in the morning.

KIRKCUDBRIGHT,

WITH THE PARISH OF TWYNHOLME AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KIRKCUDBRIGHT is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and capital of the stewartry and a parish; 100 miles s.s.w. from Edinburgh, 55E. from Portpatrick, and 28 s.s.w. from Dumfries. It occupies a peninsular situation on the east of the Dee, about six miles from the confluence of that river with the Solway Frith, is a town of considerable antiquity, but of its origin there is no authentic or even traditionary record; but that Saint Cuthbert's church was erected so long ago as the eighth century is unquestionable. The establishment of this church was followed by the construction of a small fort by the lords of Galloway, which in after-times was superseded by a castle in the proprietary of the Crown, by whose authority the place was put under the government of a constable. During the domination of the Douglasses in Galloway, Kirkcudbright became a burgh of regality under their influence: on their forfeiture, James II. erected the town into a royal burgh, by charter dated at Perth, 26th October, 1455: this grant was renewed and confirmed by Charles I., on the 20th July, 1633; and the burgh has since been under the government of a provost, two bailies, and thirteen councillors, with a treasurer and chamberlain; it joins with Dumfries, Annan, Sanquhar and Lochmaben in returning a member to parliament. The revenue of the corporation is considerably increased by the salmon fish-ings in the Dee; and the town derives a certain degree of consequence and advantage from being the seat of the stewartry courts.

Kirkcudbright which has been materially improved, at the present day pre-ents an aspect remarkably pleasing: within, it is regular, clean and neat; and externally it appears embosomed in the bountiful foliage of a fine sylvan country. It is composed of six or seven distinct streets, built at right angles with each other; the houses, which are for the most part two stories high, have a respectable and comfortable appearance, and at once bespeak the taste and easy circumstances of the inhabitants. The stewartry buildings and gaol, erected in 1816, exhibit a highly imposing appearance; and from one of the lofty towers which surmount the latter an extensive view may be obtained of the beautiful environs of the town, including the ruins of the ancient castle of Kirkcudbright, built in 1582, by M'Clellan, ancestor of the Lords Kirkcudbright. The former gaol and court-house is a very curious old edifice (with the market cross stuck up against it), supposed to have been erected about the middle of the sixteenth century. The burgh has a little shipping trade, and a productive fishery, and the intercourse with Liverpool, by steam navigation, gives animation to the town, and a stimulus to its trade. The manufacture of cotton goods and hosiery exists here to a limited extent, and the shops and inns are very respectable—of the latter, the 'Commercial' and the 'George' are the principal—both posting houses, and the proprietor of the former has private apartments to let. The harbour is the best in the stewartry; at ordinary spring-tides the depth of water is thirty feet, and at the lowest neap tides eighteen feet. The river is navigable for two miles above the town, to the bridge of Tonland, which is constructed of one arch of one hundred and ten feet span, and picturesquely blends with the surrounding landscape. As yet there is no bridge across the Dee at Kirkcudbright, and passengers and carriages have to be ferried over in a flat-bottomed boat, or sort of floating bridge of peculiar formation; in stormy weather, however, or when there is an excessive current, this mode of conveyance is not without danger; and the construction of a drawbridge, to admit of vessels passing through, would be esteemed a great improvement as well as advantage to the district. There is a regular communication kept up between this place and Liverpool, by means of a steam-vessel, at least once a week.

The established church is of recent erection, with nave and transepts, and a fine tower surmounted by a spire; it is a very tasteful structure, built wholly of stone, and stands in the centre of a beautiful plantation through which are public walks. The free church is a handsome building adjoining the Johnstone academy. In High-street is a neat chapel in which the united presbyterian congregation worship. The ancient church has been pulled down, with the exception of a fragment, enclosing a venerable monument in memory of a former Lord Kirkcudbright; a remarkable figure of whom is in fine preservation. This portion of the ancient church is now appropriated to the Countess of Selkirk's school. The academy, or grammar school, is a handsome edifice, comprising a spacious room for a public subscription library. The Johnstone's free school is a chaste stone building with centre wings, and a handsome tower it is for the tuition of both sexes, and was opened September 12th, 1848. There are in the town news and billiard rooms, and a masonic lodge. The environs of Kirkcudbright are truly delightful: the rising grounds on each side of the river, from Tongland to the sea, are embellished with thriving plantations; and the general prospect, both marine and inland, is really lovely. St. Mary's Isle, a beautiful spot, the seat of the Earl of Selkirk, is about a mile from the town. The burgh is amply supplied with all domestic necessities, and provisions are comparatively cheap. The market day is Friday, and there are two fairs, namely, on the 12th of August or following Friday, and the 29th September or Friday after.

TWYNHOLME is a parish and village, the latter a small one, is situated three miles from Kirkcudbright, on the main road from Gatehouse to Castle Douglas. The soil is fertile, and the surface of the district rises into many small hills, partly arable. Of the extensive woods with which this part of Galloway was formerly covered, the only remains now existing are around the old castle of Campstone, a building pleasantly situated on an eminence nigh the junction of the river Dee and Tarf. The village contains a small neat church of the establishment, and a parochial school.

KIRKPATRICK-DURHAM AND OLD BRIDGE OF URR.

KIRKPATRICK-DURHAM is a parish and village—the latter a small one, is 85 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 14 s.e. from New Galloway, 13 w. from Dumfries, 7 E. from Parton, and 6 N. from Castle Douglas. The parish, which is skirted by the Urr water on its western side, derives its name from the old church dedicated to St. Patrick, and Durham, a hamlet where it stood—the latter appellation signifying the ‘hamlet on the water.’ A new church in the Gothic style with a handsome tower, has been erected on the site of the old church, built two centuries ago. Formerly, a woollen mill furnished employment to many inhabitants of the village, but it is now undistinguished by manufactures of any kind, and is a place of no trade but that which belongs to a few shops for the reciprocal accommodation of the inhabitants. The parish, which is between nine and ten miles in length, and about four miles in breadth, is partly pastoral and partly arable; the former character prevailing in the north, the latter in the south of the district. A fair is held on the first Thursday after the 17th of March, (old style.)

OLD BRIDGE OF URR is a very inconsiderable village in the parish of, and two miles from Kirkpatrick-Durham; s-sited on the banks of Urr Water and contains but a few houses and no business worthy of notice.

POST OFFICE, KIRKPATRICK-DURHAM, Joseph Leslie, Post Master—Letters from various places NORTH and SOUTH arrive (from DUMFRIES) every afternoon at one and are despatched there-to at twelve noon. LAWRIESTON is a small village in the parish of Balmaghie, 23 miles w. from Dumfries, 10 N. from Kirkcudbright, the like distance s. s. e. from New Galloway, and 7 N. w. from Castle Douglas. On the north-west the village is skirted by a mountainous district, which abounds with various kinds of game: on the east the land is more fertile. The parish has several small lakes and a number of mineral springs, among the latter Lochenebreck Well is a place of some resort in the summer; and the village is a good and comfortable inn—the ‘Black Bull. About a mile west of the village is the mansion of William Kennedy L. w. E. q. the principal proprietor of it; and three miles to the east stands the parish church, with which a school is connected. A free church is in the village, and that also has a school.

NEW ABBEY, KIRKBEAN AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

NEW ABBEY is a parish and village—the latter a small one, is 80 miles s. from Edinburgh, 12 e. from Dalbeattie, and 7 s. by w. from Dumfries, situated at the eastern extremity of the county, near to the mouth of the Nith. The parish, which was originally called Kirkinder, takes its present name from the once celebrated religious establishment of New Abbey, a monastery founded in the thirteenth century, for the Cistercian order of monks, by Dovergilla, daughter of Alan, lord of Galloway. The ruins which occupy an area of two hundred and forty by one hundred and fifty feet, are supported on arches and Gothic pillars; and the area itself is used as a burial ground for Roman Catholics. The extreme outer walls, or precincts are traced to an extent of fourteen acres. To the north-east are seen the ruins of the Abbot's house, and the foot-path between the two buildings a mile long is still the kirk road. On the north and south lie the woods of Shambelly, and on the south Loch Kindar, and the dark braes of Criffle. The lofty hill of which rises to the height of two thousand feet above the sea, from which it is a mile distant. Besides that of Kindar there are two other lakes in the parish—namely Lochend and Craigend. Near the former is the spot where one of the early Covenanters of this district met an untimely end. The school of Kessock stands on the edge of the lake; and the parish kirk which was built with part of the ruinous materials of the abbey, is situated on the south of the ruins. On the Glen hill, a continuation of the Criffle range stands a monument erected in commemoration of the battle of Waterloo. It is of spiral form, ninety feet high, with a winding stair within. The base bears an inscription, laudatory of the British troops and their allies.

KIRKBEAN is a parish and village—the latter very considerable is situated in the northern part of the parish, about a mile from the sea on the road to Dumfries. This little place possesses some notoriety, if not distinction, from having been the birth-place of John Paul, otherwise Paul Jones, a 'sea adventurer,' who was born here in 1745, and was the son of an honest gardener in the place. The conspicuous mountain called Criffle, stands partly within this parish, and within that of New Abbey; and there are within the former traceable ruins of the castle of Cavens and Weathsboth, of which were the property and occasional residence of the Regent Morton. There are two other small villages belonging to this parish, called PRESTON and SALTERNESS.

NEW GALLOWAY,

WITH THE PARISHES OF BALMACLELLAN, DALRY AND CARSPHAIN.

NEW GALLOWAY is a small town and royal burgh, in the parish of Kells; 84 miles s.s.w. from Edinburgh, 25 w. from Dumfries, 18 n.e. from Newton Stewart, 14 n.w. from Castle Douglas, and 8 n.w. from Parton: pleasantly situated on the west bank of the river Ken, over which was thrown, in 1822, an elegant stone bridge of five arches; this structure, lying in the valley below the town, has a very pleasing effect; at its completion, a dinner was given by the late Lord Viscount Kenmore, to fourteen of the oldest inhabitants of the town, whose united ages amounted to 1,264 years. The houses of the town stretch along the public road, and form a tolerably well-built street. The business of the place is confined to the local domestic retail and handicraft branches; and there is a very comfortable inn—the 'Spalding Arms.' Galloway's burghal charter was conferred by Charles I., and the municipal government vested in a provost, two bailies and fifteen councillors. A justice of peace court is held in the first Monday in every month, for the recovery of debts under £5; attached to the court is a criminal and debtors' gaol, with a steeple and town clock. The burgh unites with Wigtown, Stranraer and Whithorn in returning one member to parliament.

On the north side of the town, within the distance of half a mile, is the parish church, a neat stone edifice, with a square tower in the centre, built in 1822; in the same year a Sunday school was established, in which upwards of one hundred children are gratuitously taught by the inhabitants. At a short distance south of the town stands the ancient castle of Kenmure, once a place of considerable strength; Mary Queen of Scots lodged in it one night, on her way from this country to England. Loch Ken, which joins the town, is four miles and a half long, and in many places more than a mile broad; it abounds with pike and perch, and some of the former have been caught of the astonishing weight of fifty and sixty pounds. Fairs are held on the first Wednesday after the 12th of April, the first Wednesday after the 12th of July, the first Wednesday after the 12th of August, and the first Wednesday after the 12th of November.

DALRY is rather a populous village, in the parish of its name, lying on the east bank of the river Ken; the southern portion of the district lies in a beautiful valley, composed of rich arable land; the high grounds are pastoral and grize considerable numbers of cattle and sheep. The village of Dalry (the name of which signifies 'the dale of the king,') is surrounded with delightful scenery; and there is a good inn (the Plough) at the command of the visitor. There are several lakes in the parish; the largest, called Loch Invar, covers an area of fifty acres: in the lake stands the remains of an ancient castle, formerly belonging to the Gordons, Knights of Lochinvar, and latterly Viscounts of Kenmure. Besides Dalry, there is a small village in the parish, called JOHN'S CLACHAN, agreeably situated on the margin of the Ken.

CARSPhAIRN village, which is situated near the river Deogh, contains a parish kirk, the manse, a parochial school and a few scattered houses. The parish is somewhat extensive, but thinly populated; it is the most northerly and mountainous district in the stewartry, and is chiefly devoted to grazing. This parish, with those of Dalry, Kells and Balmaclellan, are designated the district of Glenuken—named for the true breed of black-faced sheep and black cattle, as also for good horses of the Galloway breed.

The small village of BALMACLELLAN, stands on the opposite side of the Ken to New Galloway, not far from the confluence of the stream with the head of Loch Ken, twelve miles south-west of Minniehieve. The parish is of a moory character, interspersed with some inconsiderable lakes.

LANARKSHIRE,

OR, as it is sometimes designated, CLYDESDALE, is a large, populous, and highly important manufacturing district, in the western part of the Lowlands, or south division of Scotland; bounded by Dumfriesshire on the south, the counties of Ayr and Renfrew on the west, those of Dumbarton and Stirling on the north, Linlithgowshire and Edinburghshire on the south-east, and Peebles on the east. Its extreme length (from south-south-east to north-north-west) is somewhat more than fifty miles, and its greatest breadth in the middle (from east to west) is thirty-two miles; it includes within its area nine hundred and forty-two square miles of land, and three square miles of lakes: about one-half of the entire is calculated to be under cultivation. At an early period this extensive district was, for convenience, divided into two wards, called the Over Ward and the Nether Ward—Lanark being the chief town and seat of justice of the former, and Rutherglen of the latter: this arrangement was altered during the last century, when the county was divided into three wards, namely, the Upper, the Nether, and Middle Wards—the chief towns being Glasgow, Lanark, and Hamilton, and each district subject to the jurisdiction of a sheriff-substitute. The central part of the county throughout is termed Clydesdale, or the vale of Clyde, from being the basin of that beautiful and useful river, of which we shall say more hereafter. Throughout the arduous struggle for Scottish independence, Lanark was the theatre of many miseries and military excesses. Under the reign of James I, a portion of the county was taken from it, and formed into the district of Renfrew. At a subsequent date, the turbulence of the Douglasses, with the intrigues of the first Lord Hamilton, involved Lanarkshire in the various calamities consequent upon intestine warfare; it subsequently became subject a thirty years' civil commotion, stimulated by the persecution of the more zealous presbyterians of this district by Charles I: the revolution of 1688, however, was the harbinger of a more tranquil future, and it has ever since advanced in wealth and every species of improvement.

SOIL, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, CLIMATE, &c.—The upper division of the county is very mountainous; from Tinto looking northwards, the face of the country is softened down to gentle elevations and gradual depressions. The Upper Ward, which may be deemed three-fifths of the county, is mostly hilly and moorish; and, from the nature of the soil and the altitude of the surface, cannot be considered susceptible of much agricultural improvement. At the commencement of the Middle Ward, the elevation of the land is obviously diminished, while the declivity continues descending towards the north-west; the surface is everywhere diversified by frequent inequalities, so as to leave no level space except the valleys along the river: indeed the Middle Ward, though esteemed a good agricultural district, is nearly one-third moss land. The Lower Ward is of very limited extent, and derives its justly acquired importance from being the seat of a most abundant population. The commencement of improvement in soil and cultivation, in this part of Scotland, was not apparent until about the middle or nearer the end of the eighteenth century: from this period, draining, planting, and enclosing took place in various districts; wheat, barley, and oats (the two latter more abundantly), are produced from different soils in the county; potatoes are planted in considerable quantities; turnips are sown pretty generally, and artificial grasses are profusely raised in every direction: some flax is likewise grown, which is spun by females, who dispose of the yarn in the markets of Lanark, Biggar, Carnwath, and other places. Gardens and orchards occupy many acres of land, particularly on the banks of the Clyde; in this part they are of the most luxuriant growth, the orchards consisting chiefly of apple, pear, and plum trees. The inhabitants of the inland and upland districts breed and graze great numbers of black cattle and sheep. In mineral productions, Lanarkshire is, perhaps, the richest in Scotland. Gold, to an important amount, was at an early period found in this county; and in later days, on the sides of a rivulet called the Wenlock, small pieces of that precious metal, in a pure state, have frequently been picked up from among the sand and soil brought down by the torrents from the precipices and slopes of the mountains; particles of gold have also been found in Crawford Muir, with some large pieces of lapis lazuli. At present, plentiful supplies of lead may be had in Crawford; and coal, ironstone, limestone, freestone, sandstone, whinstone, fire-clay, and a variety of other metallic, mineral and fossil substances are to be obtained abundantly in different districts of the county: the lead mines, belonging to the Marquess of Queensberry and the Earl of Hopetoun, afford employment and maintenance to many thousands of people. GLASGOW being the paramount seat of the Manufactures for which Lanarkshire is so eminently distinguished, it is unnecessary in this article to treat of the subject at any length, as under the head of that most important city unsparing notice will be taken of whatever is connected with its commerce and products: it need only be mentioned, in this place, that the cotton goods for which Glasgow is the vast depository are, to a very considerable extent, woven in different villages and parishes in the county; and that this branch of manufacture alone yields support to a very large proportion of the dense population.

RIVERS, MOUNTAINS, and RAILWAYS.—The principal river is the noble and pre-eminently useful Clyde, which is formed by the concentration of a number of straggling burns and rivulets, rising amidst the mountains, and issuing from the waters which separate Lanarkshire from the counties of Peebles and Dumfries. The chief of these tributaries are the Powtrail water, the Crook burn, and the Evau and Elvan waters; these, coalescing, compose a stream that, after flowing about two miles, receives an accession, first from Glengonar water, and next from Duneaton water, which constitute it properly the river Clyde, at a distance of upwards of twelve miles from the highest springs of its fountain. The Clyde flows in a longitudinal direction, in a winding course of more than sixty miles, dividing the county into two nearly equal parts, and ultimately falls into the Frith of Clyde, opposite to the Isle of Bute. It ranks amongst the largest rivers of Scotland, and is navigable for vessels of one thousand tons burthen as far as the city of Glasgow. It waters and conduces to the fertility of delightful valleys, and in its progress forms several falls and cascades of a picturesque and romantic character—particularly 'the Falls of Clyde,' which, with the beautiful scenery around, possess an almost irresistibly attractive influence in the minds and over the feelings of visitors for pleasure, and admirers of natural loveliness. On either side, the grand river receives a variety of tributaries, all of them respectively of important advantage in their application to the machinery of manufacturing and agricultural mills: the most proninent of these secondary rivers, within the shire, are the Douglas water, the Mouse, the Nethan, the Aven, the Calder, the North Calder, and the Kelvin; there are other minor streams, of still less magnitude and consequence, as the Elwin, the Little Clyde, the Cotten, the Logan, and the Avon. The greatest elevations of this county, with their altitude above the level of the sea, are—the Lowther Hills, 2,450 feet; Tinto, 2,236; Culter Fell, 1,700; Welstoun Mount, 1,550; Leven Seat, 1,250; and Dickmount Hill, 700. The numerous lines of rail which permeate this county have given such facilities for the transmission of its products and its wants, as to cause considerable changes in its character, and also in the relative position of a large portion of its population.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Lanarkshire comprises (including the city parishes of Glasgow) forty-nine parishes and two parts of parishes, which form four presbyteries in the synod of Glasgow and Ayr; it contains three royal burghs—Glasgow, Lanark, and Rutherglen. The County returns one representative to the imperial legislature; the city of Glasgow elects two members; and the royal burgh of Lanark, in conjunction with Hamilton and Airdrie, in this county—Lithgow, in the county of that name—and Falkirk, in Stirlingshire, contributes another member.

Note.—(a) Cathhart is chiefly in Renfrewshire; the population in the entire parish in 1841 was 2,349.
(b) Govan is partly in Renfrewshire; the entire parish contained in 1841, 7,810 inhabitants.

*THE POPULATION OF GLASGOW as returned under the CENSUS, for 1851, is thus stated:—SCOTCH, 283,506; IRISH, 64,185; ENGLISH, 8,930; FOREIGNERS, 4,065; various 450—TOTAL 358,136: exhibiting an increase over 1841, of 83,633 inhabitants.

* The Quoad Sacra Districts are included in the returns for various parishes of the City and Suburbs and must not therefore be added to the total population of the county.

The total annual value of Real Property, in Lanarkshire; as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £686,531; and the amount assessed to the Property Tax, in 1849, to £1,826,305 17s. 10d.

AIRDRIE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

AIRDRIE is a thriving town, one of considerable manufactures, and a burgh of barony, in the parish of East Monkland; 18 miles N.N.E. from Lanark, 31 miles W. from Edinburgh, and 11 E. from Glasgow; eligibly situated on the great or middle road between the two cities, and occupying a rising ground with its principal slope to the west. The advance of Airdrie has been very rapid, and it is now one of the most flourishing inland towns in Scotland: somewhat more than a century ago it consisted of but two or three farm-houses; it is now daily increasing in consequence and wealth, from the inexhaustible mines of ironstone and coal with which the neighbourhood abounds. The country is intersected in every direction with rail-roads, for the transmission of coal, &c. to the various iron-works, and to Glasgow; with which city, also, and the intermediate places, a communication is maintained by a passengers' train five times a day; and the Monkland canal approaches within a mile and a half of the town. The Calder iron-works are situated about a mile and a half to the south-west, and the Monkland Steel Company's two miles and a half to the south. Exclusive of the iron and coal works, which employ a great many hands, no inconsiderable number are occupied in weaving for the manufacturers in Glasgow, as well as in the Airdrie cotton-works, brewing and distilling are likewise carried on extensively. A branch of the Bank of Scotland, one of the National Bank, and one of the Western Bank are settled here; the inns are respectable, and the shops for general supply are well stored with very necessary article for the demand of a busy population.

The burgh consists of one long principal street, through which the public road passes, with several branching and side streets and bye-lanes; it is built on a regular plan, has many excellent houses, and is lighted with gas. It possesses a handsome new town-hall, which is ornamented with a spire and a clock; in the hall a justice of peace court sits, and a sheriff court, weekly. The increase of the town led to its being erected into a burgh of barony in 1821; and it is now governed by a regular bench of magistrates, composed of a provost, three bailiffs and twelve councillors, with a treasurer and town-clerk: it unites with Lanark, Hamilton, Linlithgow and Falkirk in returning one member to parliament. A church, erected in 1834, is a neat structure, and affords worship accommodation for the western division of the parish; the other religious edifices, will be found in a subsequent page. The town has several good schools, the principal of which is the Airdrie Academy, which was opened in 1849, and erected at the sole expense of the proprietor at an outlay of upwards of £2,500. There are several useful and benevolent institutions in Airdrie; amongst these is an orphan society, for clothing and educating twenty-four children. A mechanics' institute, established in 1836, and a horticultural society. In the neighbourhood are many neat modern villas and handsome residences; Andrie House, a short distance to the west of the town, stands amidst some fine pleasure-grounds. The market days are Tuesday and Saturday; fairs are held on the second Tuesday in February, the last Tuesday in May, the fourth Tuesday in August, and third Tuesday in November.

BIGGAR AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

BIGGAR is a small town in the parish of its name, 28 miles from Edinburgh, 36 S.E. from Glasgow, 16 W. from Peebles, and 12½ S.E. from Lanark, situate on the road between the two last-named towns. The town, which consists principally of a spacious and tolerably neatly built main street, was created a burgh by charter of James II, to Sir Robert Fleming, of Biggar, in the fifteenth century. Admiral John Fleming, of Biggar and Cumbernauld, is superior, and John Robertson, Esq. is baillie. It greatly owes its prosperity to a large and populous neighbour- hood, the buildings are handsome, and the shops are well laid out, the whole being lighted with gas erected by a company in 1839. The chief employment of the inhabitants is weaving for the Glasgow houses, Nail-making is carried on to some extent, and a few good inns, the 'Commercial' being well frequented and conducted. There are two banking establish- ments, one of them the Western, is a neat and hand- some erection.

POST OFFICE, BIGGAR, Allan Whitfield, Post Master.—Letters arrive from GLASGOW and EDIN- BURGH every morning at half-past one, and every afternoon at three, and are despatched at twenty minutes before ten in the morning, and at five minutes past eight in the evening.

Letters arrive from WISTON and LEAMINGTON every morning at nine, and from CROOK and RACHAN-MILL every evening at half-past seven, and are despatched at half-past three.

BLANTYRE AND CAMBUSLANG.

BLANTYRE is a small ancient village in the parish of its name; eight miles N. by E. from Glasgow, and between three and four from Hamilton; situate on the road between the last-named town and Kilbride, and in a rich fertile district in the middle ward of the shire—the parish having a front to the Clyde of about two miles and a half, and extending six miles in length. In the village are very extensive cotton-mills belonging to Messrs. Monteith and Co., which employ many hands, and is the only branch of manufacture in the district. In the parish is a spring strongly impregnated with sulphur; the water is of a similar quality to that of St. Bernard's well, near Edinburgh; it was formerly much resorted to, and is still efficacious in the cure of scrofulous and scorbutic cases. On the south bank of the Clyde, directly opposite to Bothwell Castle, on a rocky eminence, stand the ruins of the once splendid priory of Blantyre, founded early in the thirteenth century: at the reformation the priory was demolished, and its revenues, with the patronage of the parish church, were given by James VI. to Walter Stewart, afterwards lord treasurer of Scotland, and created a baron in 1606, with the title of Lo d Blantyre. The family is distinguished in both Scottish and British history.

CAMBUSLANG is a small parish, about three miles square, lying on the west bank of the Clyde, with Blantyre on the east, Kilbride on the south, and Rutherglen on the west. The kirk, which is about four miles and a half from Glasgow and six from Hamilton, prior to the reformation belonged to a prebend of Glasgow cathedral: there was also, at that time, a chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary; in 1565, the chaplain, Sir John Miller, made grants of the property endowed for its support; these lands are still called 'Chapel lands.'

CARLUKE AND BRAIDWOOD.

CARLUKE is a small town and burgh of barony in the parish of its name, 32 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 20 s.e. from Glasgow, 10 s.e. from Hamilton, and 5 n.w. from Lanark. The parish, which lies on the south-east bank of the Clyde, is said to derive its name from St. Luke, to whom its old parish church was dedicated—the adjacent Car signifying a strength or castle; the former was ruinous before the reformation, and of the latter no traces remain to mark its site. The town contains several regular streets. Kirkton-street contains a number of handsome stone buildings, and is lighted with gas. Besides the parish church there is a free church and united presbyterians, original seceders, and a congregational church; and also a number of schools. Few districts are richer in minerals of coals, ironstone and limestone, than that of Carluke. In 1836-7 extensive works were erected by the Shotts Iron Company; they are situate about a mile north from the town, and consist of three blast furnaces, with steam engine in connexion, of the aggregate power of 140 horses. The coal, ironstone and limestone are respectively of the best quality. The trade of this town and neighbourhood is chiefly confined to mining. Two branch bank establishments are settled here, the British Linen Company's Bank and the City of Glasgow; also a well conducted savings' bank which has greatly encouraged provident habits among the inhabitants. There are also two steam corn mills in the vicinity. The banks of the Clyde have long been famous for the culture of fruit trees. Apples and pears are produced in great abundance, and in higher perfection in this district than in any other in Scotland. The margin of the river is adorned with many beautiful mansions, and tastefully arranged pleasure grounds, and the beauty of the woodland scenery in this part is justly admired. That profound mathematician, Major-General William Roy, was a native of this parish. Fairs are held on the 21st May, and 31st October, and a prize show of cattle the last Wednesday in July.

BRAIDWOOD is a small village in the same parish as Carluke, two miles from that town, situate about half a mile to the right of the road leading to Lanark. A little to the north-west of the village is Braidwood House, a handsome stone mansion, and about half a mile nearer the Clyde is a fine specimen of ancient architecture, apparently of the eleventh or twelfth century, consisting of a tower and keep in good preservation; but of the origin or uses of the structure tradition and history are alike silent. The building, which is overgrown with ivy, and partly inhabited, is called by the country people Ha'-bar (Hall-bar.)

POST OFFICE, High-street, CARLUKE, James Shaw, Post Master.—Letters arrive from LANARK every morning at eight, and are despatched every afternoon at half-past five.

CARNWATH, CARSTAIRS AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CARNWATH is a village (or small town) and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name; 25 miles s. s. w. from Edinburgh, 27 E.S.E. from Glasgow, 7 N. from Biggar, and the same distance E. from Lanark; situate on the main road between the latter town and Edinburgh. It consists of one street, nearly half a mile in length; about the centre is the tolbooth, a plain old building, in front of which is the cross, an obelisk, whereon the distances from Edinburgh to various places in Clydesdale and Ayrshire are distinctly marked. The houses, which are neat slate-roofed dwellings, have considerably augmented in number of late years. The inhabitants are employed, some in hand-loom weaving and others in agriculture. Sir N. McDonald Lockhart, Bart., of Lee and Carnwath, is superior of the burgh; Mr. S. Gray, of Lanark, writer, is the baron bailie. The estate is held of the crown, on payment of a pair of red hose, which is ran for annually on the day succeeding the August fair, and is followed by athletic games, to the successful competitors for superiority in which are awarded medals and prizes in money.

The church, a modern erection, stands at the western end of the town, contiguous to a fragment of the ancient edifice, which, prior to the reformation, belonged to the cathedral of Glasgow: the stone frame of the north window is still entire, and presents a fine specimen of masonry in the Gothic style; another portion of the old building is now used as a sepulchre by the Lockhart family; it contains the remains of the

PARKHEAD, TOLLCROSS, SHETTLESTON, BAILLIESTON, GARNKIRK, GARNQUEEN AND CHRYSTON.

COATBRIDGE is a populous village in this parish, situated on the Glasgow and Edinburgh road, eight miles E. from Glasgow, and  $2\frac{1}{2}$  w. from Airdrie, although but a few years ago this place was of trifling importance, yet by its local advantages, which consist in abundance of coal and ironstone, it begins to assume the appearance of a busy town, the Monkland and Caledonian railways pass through the village which considerably facilitate the transit of its productions. In the vicinities of the village there are six establishments for the manufacture of iron, viz., the Gartsherrie, the Calder, Laneloan, the Dundyan, the Cambrow, and those of Summerlie, all of which are on an extensive scale, and afford employment to a vast number of people; there are also three tube manufactories, two iron foundries, two banks, and several places of worship for various denominations.

The CALDER extends along the northern boundary of Lanarkshire, having Kirkiutulloch on the east, New Kilpatrick on the west, Campsie on the north, and the barony parish of Glasgow on the south: being in the immediate vicinity of the latter city, it is the residence of many of its wealthy merchants. Great improvements have been made in this district in agriculture; this progressive benefit has been accelerated by the great canal between the Forth and the Clyde, which passes through the parish for five miles, whilst the river Kelvin washes its northern boundary to the extent of six miles. The Monkland and Caledonian railways also pass through the parish. The discovery of coal (on the estates of Calder and Garnkirk, have had the effect of materially enhancing the price of land in this quarter. At Robroyston, on the 13th September, that implacable opponent of the first Edward's tyranny, Sir William Wallace, was betrayed into the power of that monarch through the jealousy of the Scottish lords.

OLD MONKLAND parish extends from the right bank of the Clyde to the border of New Monkland; a distance of between seven and eight miles, by a breadth near the Clyde, of little more than one, but afterwards expanding to nearly four miles. It is bounded on the north by Calder and the barony parish of Glasgow, and on the south by Bothwell. This is, perhaps, one of the most productive and beautiful parishes in Lanarkshire: it is well enclosed, cultivated, and finely planted with forest and fruit trees. Coal and iron stone are obtained here in great abundance. From near the centre of the parish the Monkland canal proceeds to Glasgow, and is of great advantage, not only to the proprietors of the soil, but to the manufacturers of that city.

PARKHEAD is a village in the barony parish of Glasgow, two miles from that city. Close to the village is the extensive forge works of the Parkhead Forge Company, and TOLLCROSS, a village, one mile from Parkhead, where are the Clyde iron works and extensive collieries, the property of Colin Dunlop, Esq.

SHETTLESTON is a considerable village in the parish of its name, one mile from Tollcross, situate on the high road from Glasgow to Edinburgh. In the village there is a manufactory of boilers and agricultural implements.

GARNKIRK FIRE CLAY WORKS, a mineral village, on the Caledonian railway, about five miles from Glasgow. This is supposed to be the largest and most complete manufactory of fire clay in Great Britain. There are about 500 men employed in mining and manufacturing the material; and, in connection with it, there are extensive lime workings, for the supply of the neighbouring iron works at Coatbridge and Gartsherrie. The quality of fire clay on this property is considered quite equal to the best Stourbridge, and the bricks, furnace blocks, retorts and crucibles, find their way in large quantities to all parts of America, Germany, Holland and Russia. The manufacture of glazed pipes for water and sanitary purposes, and of ornamental articles, such as chimney cans, vases, and fountains, is also extensively carried on at this establishment. In the vicinity of the above works are those of Heathfield, where articles of a similar description are manufactured.

GARNQUEEN is a station on the Monkland railway. Here, at the Glenboig works, adjoining the station, fire bricks, fire clay, Roman cement, &c. are extensively manufactured; in this vicinity coal is also plentifully obtained.

DOUGLAS AND RIGSIDE.

DOUGLAS, a village of great antiquity, is 40 miles
s.w. from Edinburgh, 31 s.e. from Glasgow, 15 N. from Leadhills, 12 s. from Lanark, and 8 s. from Lesmahago; situated nearly in the centre of the parish of its name, on the south side of the Douglas water, and on the road from Edinburgh to Ayr. The parish of Douglas takes its name from the stream that flows through it—the British words Dhu glas signifying the 'dark-blue stream;' and this is descriptive of the colour of the water. From such an etymology is derived the once dreaded and still noble name of Douglas—(of this ancient family, copious and interesting particulars will be found in Messrs. Chambers' 'Gazetteer.') In the vicinity of the village, on the bank of the river, stands Douglas Castle, surrounded by extensive plantations. The old castle of Douglas was burned down in 1760: the following year the present edifice was begun to be erected in a magnificent style, from a plan by the late architect Adam; but only a part of the original splendid design has as yet been completed.

The village consists of several narrow irregular streets, formed (without any regard to order), on uneven ground; near the centre, in the village burial-place, stands all that remains of the ancient parish church: in a vault belonging to the original structure, are to be seen monuments of some of the great chiefs of the house of Douglas; several of these highly merit

the investigation of the curious in sepulchral sculpture.
Besides the parish church, there is a free church, a united presbyterian, and a number of schools. The village is well lighted with gas. The inhabitants in general are employed in hand-loom weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers. The parish throughout is well stored with limestone, freestone, and coal; of the latter mineral, there are inexhaustible seams; many of which are seven feet thick. The district is well watered; besides the Douglas, there are three minor streams, which merge in that river previous to its falling into the Clyde, about seven miles below the village.
Fairs are held on the third Friday of March, the first Friday after Whitsuntide, the third Friday in October, and the first Friday after Martinmas, for hiring servants; the second Wednesday in June, for shearers; and the second Friday in August, for horses, of which there is always a large show.

RIGSIDE is a small village in the parish of Douglas, two miles north therefrom, situated on the road from Edinburgh to Ayr. In its neighbourhood are several collieries; it also abounds with rich and productive beds of ironstone, limestone and fire-clay. Rigside village contains a chapel for a reformed presbyterian congregation, and a school, the latter erected in 1836
by Lord Douglas.

AND ITS ENVIRONS.

property of the city. During the rebellion of 1715, the citizens of Glasgow displayed great zeal in the cause of the reigning family: they despatched six hundred men, at their own expense, to join the royal army; and a ditch round the town, twelve feet broad and six feet deep, was commenced, but the speedy overthrow of the Stuart faction dispensed with the necessity for its completion. In 1763, James Watt, who was educated in Glasgow, withdrew to a private room near the Broomielaw, and during his seclusion, with a single assistant, commenced those experiments that issued in such momentous results. Forty-nine years afterwards, the unpromising Henry Bell, of Helensburgh, launched his little 'Comet' on the Clyde—the first steam-boat in Great Britain that proved its independence of wind. The 29th March, 1782, was memorable for the extraordinary height of the tide; the Clyde rose upwards of 10 ft. above its usual mark, and completely inundated the village of Gorbals. In 1809 the battle of Corunna proved fatal to one of Glasgow's valiant sons, Sir John Moore, whose statue, together with those of James Watt and Sir Walter Scott now ornament George Square. The gorgeous banquet given to Earl Grey, in 1832, in gratitude for the boon he conferred on Scotland by the reform bill, kindled extraordinary enthusiasm in the city.

Glasgow is divided by the river Clyde into two unequal parts, that portion occupying the northern bank being the chief: this comprehends the old and new towns, with the suburbs of Calton, Bridgeton, Anderston, Brownfield, and Finnieston; the division on the opposite side of the river consists of the barony of Gorbals, including Hutchesontown, Laurieston, Tradeston, and Kingston. The communication between these two divisions of the city is by four bridges, three of stone and one of timber: that at the end of Jamaica-street, called Glasgow-bridge, is conspicuously elegant; it consists of seven arches, and the curvature is so trifling that the transit by it is attended with no inconvenience. The noble quay, which extends from this bridge in a westerly direction to a great distance, is named the Broomielaw; and it is here that the vessels, by which this part of the river is crowded, discharge and take in their cargoes: a commodious shed ranges along the greater part of the line of the quay; and (owing to the admirable regulations established, and the commanding width of the line), notwithstanding the prodigious amount of business transacted, the operations of the port are accomplished without confusion or noise, and with surprising celerity. On the 9th of April, 1851, the foundation stone of the Victoria bridge was laid by the Duke of Athol, and a gorgeous municipal and masonic procession gave éclat to this memorable event, this bridge will supersede that of timber which bestrides the river at the foot of Stockwell-street. The Suspension bridge, between Glasgow bridge and the Victoria, for foot passengers, gracefully diversifies the pontine communications between the north and south sections of the city. The southern bank of the river now rivals its competitor on the northern side, its wharfs, sheds and shipping being nearly as commodious and animated; and the former village of Gorbals has grown into a noble and extensive town. The river between the opposite quays has not only been widened, but it is progressively being deepened through the instrumentality of dredging machines, so that ships of upwards of one thousand tons burden now discharge at the Broomielaw. The city is greatly indebted to the late Mr. Spreull, who, during the period he held the office of city chamberlain, exerted himself for the accomplishment of this important object: the present spirited river trustees are vigorously acting upon his suggestions. The mud raised by the machines is conveyed down the Clyde in flats, and spread where the shore is low and swampy; by which process the banks of the river are raised, and a rich soil is deposited. A diving bell is also employed, as an assistant in the subterraneous operations.

The main line of street running east and west, is nearly two miles in length, and eighty feet wide, assuming at different points the names of Gallowgate, Trongate, and Argyll-street; noble houses and handsome shops, with few exceptions, range on both sides throughout the entire line. The street which runs from north to south is about a mile in length and fifty feet broad, bearing successively the names of Castle-street, Kirk-street, High-street, and the Saltmarket. The point of intersection of these two lines is called the Cross, and may be termed the nucleus of the city. Here stand the Town-hall and the Tontine Coffee-room (or old Exchange) with a fine piazza in front; opposite to which is an equestrian statue of King William III, presented to the city, 1736, by James M'Crea, Esq., then governor of Madras, and a native of Glasgow. Parallel with Argyll-street, towards the north, are three other splendid streets, named Ingram-street, St. Vincent-street and George-street, crossed by others of uniform elegance. But Buchanan-street, which passes in a northern direction from Argyll-street, opposite St. Enoch's square to the station of the Caledonian railway, is the handsomest business street in the city. Parallel with this is Queen-street, in which stands the Royal Exchange, with the equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington in front. Sauchiehall-street, which runs from Buchanan-street westward nearly a mile, by the elegant erections at the western end, ranks among the finest streets in the city, the shops on the southern side are very handsome and attractively stored. The architectural taste displayed in the western section of the city is of the first order, to which the two fine squares, George and Blythswood, add a graceful magnificence. Blythswood square occupies an elevated site, and the superior style of the mansions around it indicate that this neighbourhood has been adopted as a favourite place of residence by the opulent. The houses are all of stone, and the construction and arrangement of the streets impart to this vicinity a resemblance to a portion of Bath—several superb crescents adjacent strengthening the similitude. The old town lies to the east of the Trongate, extending to the Clyde on the south and to the Cathedral on the north. At the back of the Cathedral is a rocky eminence called the Merchants' Park, upon the summit of which, on a fluted Doric column fifty-eight feet high, is placed a colossal statue of the illustrious Scottish reformer, John Knox; appropriate inscriptions are sculptured on the four sides of the pedestal; this proud monument, so attractive from its position and magnitude, was raised in the year 1825. Contiguous to this is another, similar in character but of inferior dimensions, erected more recently, to the memory of M'Gavin, the formidable opponent of popery, and author of 'The Protestant.' The statue of Knox is 250 feet above the level of the Clyde, and is a conspicuous object at a great distance; the artist was Mr. Forrest, of Lanark—the likeness was taken from an original painting in the Glasgow University. The surrounding grounds have been tastefully planted, and formed into a cemetery, named the 'Necropolis,' and the stranger will be highly gratified by a visit to this interesting spot. The view from the summit of the hill is pleasing and commanding: access to it is by a handsome bridge, beneath which is a waterfall. The monument to Lord Nelson, on Glasgow Green, is a simple obelisk, 143 feet in height, surrounded by a protecting railing: the four sides of the pedestal record the birth, achievements and death of this naval hero; and the fact of this being the first memorial, sculptured to his memory impresses a high idea of the public spirit of the citizens. The 'Green,' of which it is so conspicuous an ornament, is Glasgow's pride; neither encroachment nor injury, can be committed upon it with impunity; its motto is the same as that of the national thistle, 'Nemo me impune lacessit.' This delightful promenade, from its extent, its verdure, and its plantations, may be denominated a park, the Clyde washes its southern margin: the prospect towards the south-east is beautiful and extensive—woods and villas in the foreground, and the hill of Dychmont, with the loftier and more distant one of Tinto, in the distance; here, during the summer months, may be witnessed the national game of golf; and often is the Green animated by military evolutions: the delightful sward is, however, appropriated to usefulness as well as pastime—Scotia's bonnie lassies frequently convert a portion of it into a bleaching-ground, for contiguous to this recreative rendezvous is the public washing-house, in which every convenience is provided for the deterring process; there are other similar establishments in different quarters of the city. Statues of her Majesty and of Sir Robert Peel, will shortly add two additional embellishments to this city. Conspicuous amid the throng of elegant buildings which adorn Glasgow, are the Banking Establishments, many of which are architecturally beautiful, and all are proud testimonials to the commercial enterprize of this Port, of which they are representatives. There are several corn mills in and around Glasgow, upon a scale of great magnitude. No stranger can perambulate Glasgow without noticing its admirable pavement, the material is supplied by Mr. William Sim, the lessee of the granite quarries of Furnace, near Inverary, and from the striking brightness and almost indestructible hardness of this matchless granite, Glasgow may be deemed one of the best paved cities in Europe.

COMMERCE, TRADE AND MANUFACTURES.

It will be seen, from the briefly sketched annals at the commencement of this article, that fishing was the earliest branch of productive industry established in Glasgow; cured salmon was exported in large quantities to France, and different French productions were taken in exchange. In 1667 a whale-fishing company was formed, and a soap manufactory established. The commerce of Glasgow was at first carried on in vessels chartered from English ports; although it is on record that this city was in possession of shipping prior to the year 1546, and in the reign of Charles II the 'Leon' privateer was equipped here for a cruise against the Dutch. On the Clyde, the property of Glasgow citizens crossed the Atlantic; at that time a good supply of tobacco was brought to this market, and the merchants were enabled to dispose of that article upon more advantageous terms than those of London and other commercial towns in England, which produced great animosity between those parties: the English tobacco merchants charged those at Glasgow with frauds on the revenue: an inquiry was eventually brought before parliament, when a number of restrictions were imposed on the trade, which caused it to decline in Glasgow till the year 1735; it then began to revive, and at length attained such a degree of prosperity that, for several years previous to the American revolutionary war, the annual imports of tobacco into the Clyde were from 35,000 to 45,000 hogsheads: in the year immediately preceding that disastrous war, 57,143 hogsheads were imported; from 1,200 to 1,300 hogsheads, only, of the annual imports, were sold for home consumption: indeed this trade, at that period, encompassed nearly the whole capital and commercial enterprize of Glasgow. The manufacture of green glass bottles was introduced in 1730; but the demand was then so very limited, that, although the establishment was of but inferior magnitude, the workmen were employed in the glass-house only about four months in the year. The flint glass or crystal manufactory was established in the year 1777; it has been brought to a state of great perfection, and is successfully carried on in the vicinity of the city. Inkle wares were first manufactured here in the year 1732, and were not then made in any other town in Britain; a Mr. Alexander Harvey, of this city, brought away from Haarlem, at the peril of his life, two inkle looms and a workman, and in consequence the article was first manufactured in Glasgow. About the same date a manufactory of Delf-ware was established here. The first printfield that appeared in this vicinity was at Pollockshaws, about the year 1742. The merchants and manufacturers of Glasgow, compelled to turn their attention to other objects when their favourite intercourse with America was interrupted by the war in 1775, began more generally to speculate upon the establishment of manufactures; the introduction of the muslin trade was the result, and it was prosecuted by men of capital with the greatest spirit and success. The progress of the cotton manufacture in this city was thenceforth very rapid; a number of spinning-works, constructed on scientific principles were put into operation; most of the various fabrics produced from cotton were executed with astonishing celerity and perfection; and the dying and printing of linens and cotton kept pace with these affluient improvements. A variety of other manufactures, viz. linens, baudanas, woollens, iron and machinery, chemical works, turkey-red dying, &c. consecutively followed, and were pursued with activity and advantage. To the list may now be added brass-working and type-founding, smallwares, damask manufacturing, tanning, sugar-refining, &c. all of which are carried on extensively either in the city or neighbourhood. Ship building conspicuously displays the skill and enterprise of Glasgow, the vessels constructed here, whether of timber or iron, have attained to a wide spread celebrity. The Glasgow built steam vessels are proud specimens of naval architecture. The merchants import, to a large amount, sugars, rum, wines, brandy, timber, coffee, cotton, flour, &c. and numberless other productions of the Western World, particularly from Demerara, the Caraccas, Buenos Ayres, the United States, Canada, Nova Scotia, &c.; their commercial transactions likewise extend to the coasts of Asia and Africa, and are of considerable consequence in many of the ports of Europe. Their exportations comprise muslins, shawls and every description of cotton goods, silks, glass, soap, whisky, and various manufactures of the neighbouring town of Paisley as well as the products of the adjacent districts. The situation of Glasgow, surrounded by a rich coal-field, and supplied with that important mineral at an uncommonly cheap rate, with the facilities of conveyance by Railway and Water in nearly every direction, renders it an advantageous site for carrying on almost all kind of manufactures.

The river Clyde, and the canal connecting this river with the Frith of Forth, being the channels through which the commerce of Glasgow is mainly conducted, it may be gratifying concisely to narrate a few circumstances illustrative of their navigation. (The momentous facilities for railway transit will be noticed hereafter.) In the year 1758 the first act passed for the improvement of the river, which created what is now called 'the river trust'; the preamble of this act recites "that the river Clyde, from Dumbuck to the bridge of Glasgow, is so very shallow in several parts, that boats, &c. cannot pass except at high water at spring tides;" and the act then empowers the 'trust' to scour, straighten, deepen and improve the river; authorizing them also to exact certain rates and duties for the same. The second act for improving the Clyde passed in 1770, the third in 1809, and the fourth and last in 1825—all of which authorized the improvement of the river by "widening, straightening and deepening," and the levying of stipulated duties and rates, until the river be made "thirteen feet deep at neap tides in every part thereof;" and likewise to form new works for directing the stream, and to remove all obstructions; and when these purposes are fully accomplished, the rates are to be lowered in such proportions as may be conducive to the general interests of trade: the acts also empowered the trustees to borrow sums of money upon the security of the rates. In proof of the success that has attended the efforts of the river trust, vessels of more than 1,000 tons burthen can now come up to the Broomielaw, whereas, a very few years ago, none of greater burthen than 150 tons could reach it. Several iron steam vessels have been recently launched from the Clyde Yards, that for magnitude, speed and superb fittings, may challenge a comparison with any that float. The smaller steamers are almost countless, and the subjoined comparative statements will shew the extent and importance, which steam navigation has attained on the Clyde; the arrivals are at the Broomielaw only:—

At Blackhill was constructed in 1850 an inclined plane for passing empty boats from one level to another of the Moukland canal; the apparatus is novel and ingenious, and the care with which the boats are transferred is surprising. Mr. James Leslie is the engineer.

Grangemouth is the port at the eastern entrance of the Forth and Clyde canal through which sea-going vessels with 100 tons burthen can pass to Glasgow or the Firth of Clyde, and places beyond. The length of the canal to Glasgow is 29 miles, and to the Clyde 35 miles. The locks are 20 feet wide and 74 feet long, admitting vessels about 68½ feet in length, and little under 20 feet in breadth. The depth of water is fully 9 feet. The toll for passing on the canal is one penny per ton per mile for all articles except gunpowder. For the accommodation of vessels too large to enter the canal, the capacious wet dock and other works have been recently provided, and there is now room for about 20,000 tons of shipping. The depth of water in the river Carron between the port and the Firth of Forth, is about 20 feet at spring, and 15 feet at neap tides. The entrance to the docks is by a lock 250 feet long, and 55 feet wide, capable of admitting the largest class of steam ships at present used in the home trade.

Several important lines of Railway have their termini in Glasgow, the principal ones are the Edinburgh and Glasgow; the Caledonian; the South Western; the Paisley and Greenock; and the Scottish Central; these together with some minor lines, have brought Glasgow almost into proximity with the chief towns of College, or Blackfriars Church, in High-street, is a Scotland and England, including their respective capitals, the reciprocal benefits accruing from which are manifested daily and increasingly.

This brief statement of the nature and extent of the commerce of Glasgow cannot be more appropriately closed than by a description of that superb temple which has been erected for the convenience of its votaries—the ROYAL EXCHANGE, which magnificent edifice stands on the western side of Queen-street. The principal entrance is by a grand portico of twelve fluted Corinthian columns, thirty feet high. After passing through a tasteful vestibule, the visitor enters the great reading-room, which is 120 feet long and 62 feet wide; the lofty roof is supported by a double row of columns 19 feet high, each composed of a single stone. A dome, supported by twelve Corinthian pillars, surmounts the building. The great room is supplied with all the leading newspapers, and strangers are courteously allowed the privileges of the room upon subscribing their names. The numerous apartments below and above are appropriated to various commercial purposes. The Royal Exchange forms the centre of a splendid group of buildings, of which the branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland is the chief; it is in the Ionic order; the portico is greatly admired for its classic proportions: Mr. Archibald Elliott, of London, was the architect, and Messrs. John and James Smith the builders. Besides the public reading-room in the Royal Exchange, the 'Athenæum,' in Ingram-street, and the 'Tontine Exchange room,' in Tron-gate-street, have upon their tables the principal newspapers, British and foreign, and the popular periodicals, access to which is afforded at very moderate charges; the 'Athenæum' to ephemeral literature, has added all the appliances needful for the intellectual improvement of its members, both in literature and science. There is a 'Public Library,' in George-street, stored with 15,000 volumes, subscription 10s. 6d. per annum. 'The Athenæum and Telegraphic News Room,' in Glassford-street, admits besides, upon payment of one penny to peruse all the London; Provincial and Foreign Newspapers, which are profusely supplied in their extensive suite of rooms. There is also Stirling's Library, situated 48 Mellor-street.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT, &c.

The 'Lord Provost' is the designation of the chief magistrate of Glasgow, who is styled honourable; the present Lord Provost is Sir James Anderson; the subordinate functionaries are five bailies, the dean of guild, and the deacon convener. There are thirty-two councillors—six for each of the five districts into which the city is divided, and the dean of guild and deacon convener, who are councillors by virtue of their offices. The principal officers connected with the corporation are the treasurer, chamberlain, town clerks, master of works, baillie of the river and firth of Clyde and his deputy, baillie of provan, procurator fiscal, and sub-intendant of streets and buildings. There are also two other bodies that exercise municipal privileges—the Merchants' House and the Trades' House: the dean of guild belongs to and is nominated by the former, and the convener to the latter house, by which he is appointed. The different suburban burghs and the barony of Gorbals have each their respective local functionaries. The Merchants' Hall, in Candlerigg-street, is capacious and handsome, and public meetings occasionally take place therein. The Trades' Hall, in Glassford-street, is a very imposing building: the front consists of a centre and wings, supported by a rustic basement; four Doric columns above support the entablature, and a dome, surmounted by a lantern, rises from the roof. The hall, one of the finest rooms in the city, is seventy feet long, thirty-five broad, and twenty-four high, exclusive of the dome. On the walls and staircase are hung portraits of persons of the trades' rank that have conferred donations on the house, and also tablets recording the names of the conveners from 1605 to the present time. The City Hall, in Candlerigg-street, is a very spacious and handsome building, in which public meetings are commonly held. In Hope-street stands the "Corn Exchange," a spacious and handsome structure, with a portico sustained by Corinthian fluted columns, the interior is fitted up in complete adaptation to the peculiar transactions of this important market, held every Wednesday. Contiguous to this building will shortly arise a quadrangular series of erections, somewhat upon the plan of the celebrated "Petais Royal," at Paris, and here as there amusements, will be combined with business. Hope-street for length and width and graceful buildings ranks with the most conspicuous for beauty in Glasgow. The police are under the direction of the honourable the lord provost, the magistrates, dean of guild, deacon convener, and thirty-five commissioners, one to each of the thirty-five wards into which Glasgow is sub-divided. There are several courts held within the jurisdiction of the city, the chief of which are the following:—the Dean of Guild Court, held every alternate Thursday at eleven o'clock, takes cognizance of buildings and streets. The Sheriff Small Debt Court, for debts not exceeding £8 6s. 8d., sits every Thursday at eleven, and has jurisdiction over the whole county of Lanark. The Justice of Peace Small Debt Court, for the Lower Ward of Lanarkshire, meets every Monday morning at ten, in the County Hall, to decide claims of £8. and under. The County Court sits every Wednesday for criminal offences, and Thursday for the recovery of small debts. The River Baillie Court sits every Tuesday and Friday, and has maritime jurisdiction between Glasgow Bridge and the Clough, near the mouth of the Clyde. The Sheriff Ordinary Court sits every Wednesday at eleven, and the Burgh Ordinary Court every Friday, except during vacation; both adjudicate on causes of any amount, however large. The principal Gaol, called the North Prison, is in Duke-street, which, unfortunately, it has been found necessary to enlarge, by the erection of a considerable compartment in the rear; Debtors are confined in the west wing of this prison. The South Prison is in the rear of a commanding range of buildings, with its frontage towards the river, near the Victoria Bridge, there is a noble Portico in the centre, composed of a double row of fluted columns. The judiciary hall is in the centre, arranged with the requisite conveniences for a court of justice. To the north is the borough court. The council chambers to the south, and the remainder of the floor is appropriated to the jurymen, clerks and witnesses. The upper story contains the lord provost's room, and other public apartments. The chief Police Office is in South Albion-street, and the supervision of the city by the efficient force under the direction of this office, is highly creditable to the various functionaries. The new Post Office now being erected in George-square, will add another sumptuous edifice to the multitude that adorn Glasgow. Glasgow returns two members to parliament.

RELIGIOUS EDIFICES.

The Cathedral, or High Church, ornaments the north-eastern termination of the city, and is one of the very few ecclesiastical structures of ancient Scotland that has withstood the withering influence of time, the assaults of religious fury, and the sapping of neglect; it arose in the early part of the twelfth century. John Achaus, bi-hop of Glasgow, was its founder, and John Murdo its supposed architect, the reigning king being David I, who witnessed its consecration. A stone above the door of the choir tells us, in Latin, that it was dedicated in 1197, Saint Mungo or Kentigern being invoked as its tutelar patron. The figure of the edifice is cruciform. From the centre of the building rises a square embattled tower, of lofty octangular form, from which springs a spire. At the western end of the church is another square tower, covered with a leaden pyramidal roof, within which is a clock and a bell. The entire building is arranged in four divisions, namely, the choir, the inner high church, the outer church, and the vaulted cemetery. One hundred and fifty-seven pillars and one hundred and fifty-seven windows combine to give support and illumination to the church. The cemetery, beneath the nave, will excite in the visiter an appalling interest; the roof is supported by sixty-five pillars. In consequence of the elevated site of the cathedral the views from its battlements are very extensive and diversified. The Barony Church, contiguous to the cathedral, was built in 1798, from a design of Mr. Adam; the parish connected with this church, is the largest in the city. The plain building, erected in 1699, on the site of a more ancient pile, called Blackfriars, which, in 1666, was destroyed by a thunder-storm. The Tron, or Leigh Church, near the Cross, was erected in 1794, and is a plain building, surmounted by a cupola. A spire, built in 1637, stands between it and the street, having a clock and two bells. The name of 'Tron' was applied to this church from a part of its steeple having been used as a weigh-house. The clock-faces of this church are lighted externally by gas lamps. Saint Andrew's Church, which stands in the square of the same name, was completed in 1756, at an expense of £15,000., and resembles that of Saint Martin's-in-the-Fields, London. The architect was Munro Nasmith. Saint Enoch's Church, was erected in 1780, from designs by Mr. Jaffray: the front, on which is the spire, is decorated with a Doric portico, and has a light and handsome appearance; it stands in St. Enoch's-square, and is a graceful terminating object from Buchanan-street. Saint George's Church, on the west side of Buchanan-street, fronting George-street, is a handsome edifice, with three quarter Doric columns in front, the whole height of the church. The steeple is crowned with a dome and obelisk, and is one hundred and sixty-two feet high. This church was finished at an expense of £9,000. Saint John's Church, in Grange-street, is one of the largest places of worship in the city, affording sixteen hundred sittings: it was built during the residence here of Dr. Chalmers, whose pulpit oratory attracted large congregations. The exterior is of chaste Gothic. This church has a magnificent steeple, one hundred and thirty-eight feet high, containing a complete peal of bells. The Gorbals Church, is situated at the east end of Carlton-place, fronting the river: it was completed in 1810, from designs by Mr. D. Hamilton. The clock of this church, from its great elevation, is seen to a great distance. Saint David's Church, at the end of Candlerigg-street, is in the Gothic style, and was built from the designs of Messrs. Rickman and Hutchinson, of Birmingham. Circumstances having rendered it expedient to retain the shape and dimensions of the old church, it is built in the form of a cross, and is ornamented with a tower one hundred and twenty feet high, containing a complete set of bells. The vaulted cemetery beneath, is one of the most complete in the kingdom. The cost of the church was £7,000., but the sepulchres in the crypt sold for £4,000. The patronage of the city churches belongs to the magistrates and town-council, with the exception of those of the inner High church and the barony, which pertain to the Crown. The patronage of Gorbals church is with the heritors or feuars, who purchased it from the college. The stipends of the city clergy are £425. per annum, and those of the inner High Church and the Barony £500. The pew sittings are let annually.

Since the disruption in 1843, a large number of free churches have been erected, the particulars of which will be found in the appendix at the close of the 'Glasgow Directory;' many of these structures are highly decorative to the city. Saint John's, in George-street, is conspicuous for its ornate spire; and the recently finished Saint Matthew's church, at the west-end of Sauchiehall-street, with its lofty spire, is a graceful ornament to that aristocratic quarter of the town. The chapels of the united presbyterians, the episcopalians, and other dissenters from the establishment, are very numerous; and many of them are attended by large congregations. Those most conspicuous for architectural beauty are the following:—Greyfriars; North Albion-street, united presbyterian church, which is ornamented by a fine Grecian portico. Wellington-street chapel, in the same connexion, is a very tasteful structure, below which are numerous sepulchral crypts. Saint Mary's episcopal chapel, in Renfield-street, of modern erection, and that near St. Andrew's-square, built in 1750, are both ornamental to their respective neighbourhoods. George-street, independent chapel, in which Dr. Wardlaw officiates, is a chaste specimen of the Grecian style, and is a conspicuous object from George-square; it was designed by Mr. Gillespie, of Edinburgh, and cost £10,000. A new independent chapel has arisen in Holland-street, in the ornate Gothic style. The baptists have six places of worship, the methodists four, and the reformed presbyterians two. The Roman catholic chapel, in Clyde-street, was erected in 1815; the style is pointed Gothic, light in its aspect, and rich in its embellishments. The chapel will contain more than two thousand persons, and is arranged within, in a style corresponding with its elegant exterior. Mr. Gillespie, of Edinburgh, furnished the design, and Mr. Smith, of Glasgow, was the builder. A list of all the other places of worship will be found at the end of the 'Glasgow Directory,' with the names of their ministers.

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

The Royal Infirmary, situate near the Cathedral, exhibits an exterior of considerable beauty, while the arrangements of the interior are skilfully adapted to their benevolent object. The building has been much enlarged since its first erection, the latest addition being for the reception of fever patients. The lowest story contains a laboratory, an apothecary's shop, hot and cold baths, and strong chambers for the temporary restraints of the insane. Beneath the dome is a spacious circular apartment, which is appropriated to surgical operations.—The Royal Lunatic Asylum, at Gartnavel is a noble edifice, admirably constructed for the recovery and comfort of its unhappy inmates, no appliance is wanting that can minister to the attainment of these objects—a portion of the establishment is appropriated to pauper patients. There is a private "Asylum for the Insane," called Gargad House, the situation is healthful, and it is under the excellent superintendence of Dr. William Drury. The Town's Hospital, for paupers in the Parliamentary-road is a building strikingly original in its design. The centre is octagonal, with four wings diverging from it. The wings contain rows of commodious chambers, and a long gallery for exercise. This structure was erected as an asylum for lunatics, but these have been removed to the Royal Lunatic Asylum, at Gartnavel. The Poor House for the extensive barony parish at Barabhill, is a very capacious asylum for the children of poverty, and well adapted by its cleanliness, ventilation and position to mitigate the ills of their condition. The Deaf & Dumb Asylum is contiguous to the Infirmary, and, though plain in its aspect, possesses every adaptation for its interesting object. The Asylum for the Blind, by a recent enlargement, has been rendered capable of accommodating more than one hundred inmates, who are advantageously employed in the fabrication of various useful articles; and the recent invention of printing in relief, by enabling the blind to read manipular or tangible letters, has given a most interesting facility to their education. The Magdalen Asylum, adjoining the town's hospital, was erected in 1812, from designs by Dr. Cleland, a gentleman to whom Glasgow owes many obligations. The accommodations are in every way suitable to the purpose for which it was built; and its benefactors have the satisfaction of believing that many of its female inmates have subsequently become permanently worthy of the protection that has been afforded them. The Lock Hospital is contiguous to the Magdalen Asylum.—Hutchinson's Hospital, in Ingram-street, was founded by the two brothers, George and Thomas Hutchinson, between the year 1639 and 1641: the former amassed a large fortune as a writer and notary, although his charges were so moderate that, it is stated, he would never charge more than sixteen pennies Scots for the writing of a bond, however large the amount: the latter brother was a preacher. From the original endowment and subsequent benefactions, the trustees are enabled to appropriate £3,000. per annum to pensions for aged men and women, and for the education and partial clothing of poor boys, together with £3. per annum to the latter. The present building, erected in 1803, is ornamented with an octagonal spire, one hundred and fifty-six feet high. St. Nicholas's Hospital was founded by Bishop Muirhead, in the reign of James III, for the support of twelve aged men and a priest; and Archbishop Leighton, in 1677, added £150. for the benefit of two more: the funds of the institution, however, have suffered considerable diminution.—The Female Orphan Institution is for the reception of poor orphans and destitute girls, who are educated, clothed, and maintained for £10. 10s. per annum, or, without clothing, for £8. which must be paid in advance. The Eye

Infirmary, in College-street, is liberally supported, and has been successful in its operation.—In addition to the benevolent institutions already enumerated, there exist many others which shed a lustre on the memories of departed citizens of Glasgow. Mitchell's mortification, made in 1729, yields £100. per annum to decayed burgesses and their families; and Tennant's, made in 1741, renders to three widows 80 merks, or £4. 18s. 10d., the remainder devolving on two of the General Session Charity Schools. Wilson's charity, founded in 1778, bestows education and clothing on forty-eight poor boys; and Millar's, since 1790, has educated sixty girls annually, at a yearly expense of £300. The societies for religious objects are also very numerous, and are liberally supported. The "Glasgow association for establishing lodging houses for the working classes" is an interesting "sign of the times" we live in; the association have already purchased several plots of ground in airy localities, whereon to erect dwelling places, that shall be spacious, cleanly and well ventilated, and these will be let at very low charges—the beds from 3d. to 6d. a night.

INSTITUTIONS

FOR EDUCATION, LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND THE ARTS.

THE UNIVERSITY.—This venerable College presents its antiquated front on the eastern side of High-street. Entering by the central gate, over which are the royal arms, the visitor finds himself in the first quadrangle, and he will not fail to notice the antique stone stairs leading to the Faculty hall, with their guardian lions, sejant on one side, and unicorn on the other: this hall contains many rare paintings, both historical and portrait, among the latter are those of Luther, Knox, Buchanan, Napier and Smollett. The second quadrangle is much larger, surrounded on three sides by buildings, part of which are in the old monastic style, with low towers and curtains; while others, of recent erection, are built in the modern style, the effect of which is distressing to good taste. These buildings contain the anatomical theatre, and rooms for the classes in Greek, logic, humanity, chemistry, medicine and mathematics. The old library is an insulated building to the south-east; and the new one is at the south end of the anatomical theatre. The chapel, or common hall, is fitted up with considerable taste, and can accommodate nearly 1,000 worshippers. Rising over the entrance to the second quadrangle is the steeple, 135 feet high, which is protected from lightning by a conductor, erected in 1772, under the direction of the renowned Dr. Franklin. At the back of the College are spacious gardens, in which is placed the Macfarlane Observatory; and near the entrance to these gardens, forming the eastern termination to the College, stands the Hunterian Museum, an edifice, pronounced by critics to be one of the most felicitous specimens of classical architecture in Great Britain: it was reared in 1804, from designs by Mr. Stark; the principal front forming a Roman Doric portico of six columns, behind which is a recess, separated by a second row of pillars. Beautiful as this portico is, the whole fabric is in harmony with it, combining graceful proportion of parts with simple elegance of form. This museum was bequeathed to the College by the celebrated Dr. Hunter, of London, who was a native of East Kilbride. The collection comprises specimens of natural history, anatomical preparations, paintings, books, and medals—the medals being estimated at £30,000, and the whole collection cost Dr. Hunter, £100,000. The pictures are all from great masters; amongst many others are Titian, Guido, Domenichino, Rubens, and Rembrandt. The university was founded by Turnbull, Roman catholic bishop of Glasgow, in 1450-1. At the reformation Archbishop James Beaton fled before the triumphant presbyterians, carrying with him the charters and records, which he placed in the Scots College, at Paris. James VI granted a new charter, and endowed the college with valuable property, since which it has risen to high reputation. The establishment consists of a lord chancellor, lord rector, dean of faculty and principal, with professors of divinity, church history, oriental languages, natural philosophy, logic, Greek humanity, civil law, medicine, anatomy, practice, astronomy, Rexus professors of natural history surgery, chemistry and botany, and a lecturer on materia medica. The Andersonian University, in George-street, founded by the late John Anderson, professor of natural philosophy in the University of Glasgow, on the 7th of May, 1795, and the following year was incorporated by the magistrates and council. This University is placed under the superintendence of eighty-one trustees, and the lord provost is one of the inspecting visitors. The endowment consisted of a philo-sophical apparatus, a library, and museum; but the prosperity of the institution has been so great, that the trustees have purchased the extensive pile of buildings formerly occupied by the grammar school, which were opened in 1828, and the numerous classes now receive a more extended education, including philosophy, science and the arts. The museum is opened to the public from eleven to three, on the payment of sixpence. The High School, situate at the top of the hill behind the above University, is of an origin supposed to be coeval with the Cathedral, and within this Alma Mater several hundreds of youth acquire the elements of a liberal education.—The Mechanics' Institution, near North Hanover-street, owes its origin to a dispute among the managers of the Andersonian University, and it would be well if all quarrels terminated so beneficially. The useful class of persons that give name to this institution acquire, from competent lecturers, that species of knowledge, which, in the first instance, elevates themselves, and will ultimately, the nation to which they belong. The Calton, Mile-end and Bridgeton Mechanics' Institution was instituted in 1833, for an object similar to that of the above, namely, improvement in the arts and sciences. Faculty of Physicians' and Surgeons' Hall. This ornamental building is situated in St. Enoch's-square, within which the two incorporated bodies above-named hold their meetings. The charter of their incorporation confers the right of granting diplomas, after examination, to students in medicine and surgery: and every person practicing without such diploma in Glasgow, Renfrew, Dumbarton, Lanark, Kyle, Carrick, Avr and Cunningham, is liable to a fine of £3. 6s. 8d. for each offence. The members of faculty enjoy the privilege of exemption from many imposts and irksome duties. The freedom fine of admission into the faculty is £150. and licentiates within the city or suburbs pay £20. but those in the country £5. 5s.: for the diploma of each student £5. 5s. are required. Every candidate for a diploma must produce evidence that he has studied three winter sessions, either at an university or under resident members of the colleges of physicians and surgeons of Edinburgh, London, or Dublin, or under the members of the faculty of physicians and surgeons in Glasgow; and that during that period he has attended public lectures on anatomy, surgery, chemistry, materia medica, the theory and practice of medicine, and midwifery; and that he has attended one year at some hospital, and studied pharmacy in an apothecary's or surgeon's shop for six months, without which he cannot be taken on trial. Candidates who have served an apprenticeship of three or more years must produce similar evidence. The faculty contribute to a fund, founded in 1792, for the support of their widows and children. The educational institutions of Glasgow are very numerous and are supported with creditable spirit, they are enumerated under the head of endowed schools, and in the list of public buildings, at the end. But the ragged school which occupies a noble building in Rotten-row, merits special notice from its peculiar character and beneficial results, the pupils are mostly the offspring of dishonest and profligate parents, the children are fed as well as instructed.

PLACES OF AMUSEMENT.

The Theatre Royal is in Dunlop-street, and is capacious and tasteful, its predecessor in Queen-street, was burnt down in 1829; the lessee is Mr. Mercer, H. Simpson. The Prince's Theatre has two entrances, West Nile street, and Buchanan street, this also is fitted up with much taste. The Queen's Theatre is in Green Dyke street. The Assembly and Concert Rooms were erected in 1796, and constitute a very elegant embellishment to Ingram-street: the wings were added in 1807. The Royal Botanic Garden, at the end of Sauchiehall-road, is highly deserving of inspection, as within this enclosure flourish more than 12,000 species of varieties of trees and shrubs, inclusive of coffee, cotton, tea, sugar, chocolate, cocoa, date, cinnamon, nutmeg, clove and bread fruit. Strangers are admitted on payment of six-pence. There are several Music Saloons that are very attractive, conducted upon the plan of affording refreshments, enlivened by gratuitous amusements. The Argyll Arcade runs from Argyll-street, to Buchanan-street, and contains attractive shops, covered in by a lofty roof of glass. There is a second Arcade in Sauchiehall-street, called the Wellington; and the Bazaar, is situated in Candlerigg's street. The public slaughter-houses are in Market-street, Scott-street, Milton-street and Moore-street, Gallowgate, the Superintendent is Mr. James Scott. The chief market day for corn and provisions is Wednesday. There are five fairs in the year, viz., the second Wednesday in January, Thursday before Easter, last Monday in May, the whole of the second week in July, and the first Wednesday after Martinmas.

GOVAN is a picturesque village nearly 3 miles w. from Glasgow, on the north bank of the Clyde, it possesses a handsome church, belonging to the establishment, surmounted by a spire. A free and an united Presbyterian churches, there are several schools in the village, and three yards for the building of iron ships.

PARTICK is a village 3 miles n. w. from Glasgow, irregularly built but environed by agreeable scenery, there are several Mills and Factories in the place, and an iron boat building yard. The village contains an Established and a Free church, and several schools.

MARYHILL a village 3 miles n. w. from Glasgow, is situated on the banks of the River Kelvin, which stream is crossed by the Forth and Clyde canal, by the medium of a noble aqueduct of lofty altitude; the village contains an established, and a free church, and a Roman Catholic chapel. On the banks of the Canal is the ship building yard of Mr. David Swan. There are two print works, an iron foundry, a spinning mill, bleach-works, and glass-works.

HAMILTON,

BOTHWELL, DALZIEL, UDDINGSTONE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

HAMILTON is an ancient town, royal burgh, and the capital of the parish of its name and of the middle ward of the county; 37 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, 10½ s.e. from Glasgow, 15 n.w. from Lanark, 8 s. from Airdrie, and 7 n. from Strathaven: it occupies an eligible site, on the roads betwixt Glasgow and Carlisle and Edinburgh and Ayr, and a pleasant situation in a highly cultivated country, washed by the Clyde and the Avon. The town lies along the base of a rising ground, extending nearly a mile in length, and consists of several streets of substantial well-built houses—not very regularly disposed, but handsome in appearance; and the whole town has an air of comfort, respectability, and activity. Of late years many improvements have been effected in the town and neighbourhood, and it is rapidly increasing in population and importance. A new line of street has been opened through the town, forming part of the London road; and a bridge, called Cadzow-bridge, has been thrown across the ravine, thereby avoiding the lower part of the old town, and a railway has been laid down from Glasgow, which has proved the means of opening the vast mineral field in the vicinity of Hamilton. Among the new buildings recently erected will be recognised the handsome town-hall, in form of a Roman temple, with appropriate offices and a gaol; and a new church of the establishment, dedicated to St. John. The town is lighted with gas by a company, and works are constructed for supplying the inhabitants with water. The moderate distance of Hamilton from Glasgow has facilitated the introduction of weaving cotton goods here to a large amount; the lace trade is carried on to a considerable extent, and the prosperity of this branch has been greatly augmented by improvements. There are three banking establishments prosperously settled in this burgh, namely—a branch of the British Linen Company, one of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, and the other of the Western Bank of Scotland, and also a savings' bank.

In the infancy of the town, in the fifteenth century, its patron, Lord Hamilton, erected it into a burgh of barony; Queen Mary created it a royal burgh in 1548, but, after the reformation, the rights and privileges thus acquired from the crown were resigned into the hands of William Duke of Hamilton, who in 1670 restored to the community its former franchises, and erected it into a burgh of regality dependent on him and his successors. The government of the burgh is vested in two bailies and ten councillors; and in connexion with Lanark, Airdrie, Falkirk and Liffelithgow, it sends a representative to parliament. The justices of peace hold regular courts for trial of minor offences.

The places of worship are churches of the establishment, free churches, meeting-houses of the united secession, relief churches, and an independent chapel. The old parish church was made collegiate in 1451, by Sir James Hamilton, for a provost and prebendary, it has always been the place of sepulture of that family. The great objects of attraction, in this part of Lanarkshire, are the Palace (as it is called) of the Duke of Hamilton, and its surrounding pleasure grounds: the building forms three sides of a quadrangle; the rooms are spacious, particularly the picture gallery, which contains the finest collection in Scotland. In the middle of the great park, one mile from the town, on a rock overhanging the Avon, stand the ruins of Cadzow Castle, the ancient manor house; the park is well stocked with deer, and bears a number of stately oaks. The residence of the Hamilton family contributes materially to the welfare of the town. Amongst the charitable institutions of Hamilton are two hospitals for the reception of a certain number of old men—the one endowed by the noble family above mentioned, the other by a Mr. James Robertson; there are likewise some friendly societies, and two masonic lodges. In the vicinity, to the west of the town, on the road to Bothwell, are spacious and handsome barracks; and on the banks of the Clyde is an extensive race-course, on which horse races occasionally take place, and the meetings are noted as among the best attended in Scotland. The weekly market is held on Friday; and the fairs on the second Thursday of February, the first Friday after the 15th of May, the last Thursday of June, and the second Thursday of November (old style.)

BOTHWELL is an ancient village in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Glasgow to Hamilton, between eight and nine miles from the former and between two and three from the latter town. The parish is of an oval form, about eight miles and a half long by four broad; the great roads from Edinburgh to Glasgow, and from Glasgow to Carlisle, pass through it; and, besides the river Clyde, it is intersected by the two Calder, which are beautifully skirted with wood. Near the village, towards the west, on the side of the Clyde, is the modern mansion of Lord Douglas, standing in the midst of shrubberies and plantations; contiguous to which, on an eminence, is the magnificent ruin of Bothwell Castle, once a most important Scottish fortress, much admired by all visitors. The road to Hamilton is carried over the Clyde by means of Bothwell bridge, a name famous in Scottish history from this being the spot on which the Duke of Montrose routed a formidable army of covenanters on the 22d of June, 1679. The ancient church of Bothwell was founded by Archibald 'the Grim,' Earl of Douglas, in 1398, with liberal endowments for a provost and eight prebendaries. Lately an elegant new church has been erected by the heritors of the parish; it is in the Gothic style, and exhibits a fine appearance as seen on approaching the village from Hamilton.

The parish of DALZIEL lies on the north bank of the Clyde; and the road from Lanark to Glasgow, and from Edinburgh to Hamilton, pass through it. Near the centre of the parish, at about two miles from Hamilton, stands the church, in a conspicuous situation on the summit of a ridge; and on the picturesque banks of a small brook is seen the mansion-house of Dalziel, attached to the old tower of the manor—a high Gothic edifice, with battlements and loop-holes; it is a structure of considerable antiquity, and has been kept in repair to the present day solely on that account.

UDDINGSTONE is a small village in the parish of Bothwell, four miles north-west from Hamilton. The road from Glasgow to Carlisle passes through the village.

KILBRIDE (EAST) AND CARMUNNOCK.

KILBRIDE is a market village and burgh of barony in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Glasgow to Muirkirk, 8 miles s. from the former city the line distance n. from Strathaven, between 6 and 7 s. w. from Hamilton, and 45 w. by s. from Edinburgh. The parish, which comprehends the abrogated one of Torrance, contains some extensive lime-works, and coal also lies beneath the surface. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers. The places of worship are the parish kirk and a relief chapel. Kilbride has produced several eminent men, among whom are found Dr. Wm. Hunter, and his brother, Mr. John Hunter, the celebrated anatomist and physiologist. A market is entitled to be held here on Tuesday, and four annual fairs; only two of the latter are now observed—these take place in June and November. There were also large sheep-markets held here in May and June; they have been discontinued, with the exception of one on the last Friday in May (old style), which is still well attended; on that day, likewise, the farmers' society exhibit prize cattle.

The parish of CARMUNNOCK lies on the north-western confines of the county, on the east bank of the White Cart river, having Kilbride on the south and Cambuslang on the east; it is four miles in length by three in breadth. The ground is partly arable and partly pastoral, the banks of the Cart presenting some fine woodland scenery. On the estate of Castlemilk (the proprietors of which are supposed to be lineal descendants of the royal house of Stuart) are the remains of a Roman military road; and many tumuli have been met with, which, when opened, have always been found to contain human bones and instruments of war. In the house of Castlemilk, which is noted for its fine situation, Mary, Queen of Scots is said to have lodged the night before the battle of Langside.

LANARK,

WITH NEW LANARK, KIRKFIELD-BANK AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LANARK is a royal burgh, market town, the capital of the county and parish to which it gives name, and the seat of a presbytery; 32 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 25 s.e. from Glasgow, 15 s.e. from Hamilton, and 11 n.w. from Biggar, situate on the main road from Stirling to Carlisle, and one mile above the left or east bank of the Clyde. It is a place of great antiquity, and is the spot where the first assembly of parliament mentioned in the history of Scotland was convened, by Kenneth III, in the year 978. It is said to have received its original charter from Alexander I, and it is certain that it was a royal town as early at least as Malcolm IV. Many of the ancient Scottish kings made Lanark (or Lanerk) their residence; and at one period there stood a castle, on an apparently artificial mount at the bottom of the present Castlegate, the summit of which elevation is now converted into a bowling-green. Lanark possesses interest as having been the scene of the first decisive military enterprise of the celebrated Sir William Wallace—that patriot having here commenced his glorious (though personally unfortunate) career, by the defeat and death of William De Heselrig, the English sheriff of Lanarkshire, in 1293. We are told that Wallace having married a lady of the name of Braidfoot, the heiress of Lamington, resided with her privately at Lanark; that while there, he, with a few friends, had a quarrel and conflict with some officers of the English garrison, the party of Wallace being overpowered by numbers, he made his escape to Cartlane Craigs—on which the sheriff seized on his wife and put her to death: to revenge this barbarous atrocity, Wallace and his friends attacked the sheriff in the night, and massacred him with two hundred and forty Englishmen. Bruce finally recovered Lanark from the English in 1310. The present town is principally composed of one line of streets, descending from east to west, bearing the respective names of High-street, Bloom-gate, and West-port; besides these, there are smaller streets diverging, and several lanes and closes. The main line contains many good stone buildings, of respectable appearance, and well-furnished shops; the whole being suitably lighted with gas, supplied by a company, whose works were erected in 1832, at Steel's-cross. The general occupation of the inhabitants is hand-loom weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers; nail-making is carried on to some extent. There is also a brewery, three banks, and several good inns, the 'Clydesdale' ranking with the most extensive and well-conducted hotels in the provinces, and it boasts a fine portico entrance, which is an embellishment to the street in which it stands. Behind it are the Assembly Rooms erected in 1827, on the site of which stood an ancient monastery of Franciscans. The County Buildings, in Hope-street, are a great ornament to that part of the town; they are in the Grecian style of architecture, with a noble front of freestone, and comprise commodious court-rooms and appropriate offices; the gaol is situated at the rear of the court-house: the whole of this handsome and useful pile was completed in 1836, at an expense of upwards of £5,000.

As a royal burgh, whose charters were finally confirmed by Charles I. in 1632, it is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a town-clerk, a treasurer, and twelve councillors; it unites with Hamilton, Linlithgow, Airdrie and Falkirk in returning one member to parliament. The sheriff's court is held in the county buildings every Tuesday during session; a justice of peace court on the first and third Monday of each month; one for the burgh every Friday, and a general county meeting takes place annually in the same edifice on the last day of April.

The places of worship consist of the parish church, which stands in the centre of the main street, a Quoad Sacra free church, two united presbyterians, and a congregational church, and a Roman catholic chapel. In a niche over the eastern door of the church is placed a colossal statue of Wallace, executed and presented to the town by Forrest, a self-taught genius. The remains of the old parish church, which are situated at the distance of a quarter of a mile eastward of the town, have been deserted for more than seventy years; tradition asserts that in this structure, at public worship, the heroic Wallace first saw his subsequently murdered wife. In the cemetery which surrounds the church was interred William Lithgow, a celebrated and eccentric traveller of the reign of James VI; after his peregrination through a great portion of Europe and Asia, he came home miserably mutilated and disfigured by the inquisition, and settled in his native parish till his death. The principal educational institutions are the grammar school supported by the corporation; and Wilson's free school, endowed by a lady of that name, in the year 1818, for the education of twenty-five boys and the like number of girls.

Lanark has ever possessed considerable attractions to the visitor and the tourist, from the beautiful undulating scenery and the romantic grounds at Bonnington, and the falls of the Clyde. The falls of Corra, where the water takes three distinct leaps, making altogether eighty-four feet. A little further is Bonnington fall. About a mile to the north of the tower is a very old arch supposed to have been erected either by the Picts or Romans. A fine view of Cartlane bridge, erected in 1822, is obtaine here, and Cartlane Craigs, a deep and rugged chasm, evidently formed by a convulsion of nature will be an interesting object to the visitor. The neighbourhood of Lanark is adorned with many mansions of the nobility and gentry, and at Lee House, the seat of the Lockhart family, is to be seen the curious stone, called the 'Lee Penny,' which is said to have suggested to the late Sir Walter Scott, the idea of his celebrated novel the 'Talisman.' Horse races are now held on an extensive and excellent course about a mile and a half east of the town. In the vicinity is a large loch, which, until the last few years has been quite disregarded, but by the spirit and enterprise of a few individuals its margins have been embanked and planted, and it forms an attractive and delightful promenade, and is much frequented by the inhabitants. The market day is Tuesday; fairs, the last Wednesdays of April, May and July (old style), the Thursday after the second Monday of October, and the first Wednesday of November (old style), all for cattle and horses, and lambs in the season.

NEW LANARK is a very neat, regular, and well-built village, about one mile south from Lanark, on the same side of the Clyde as that town. It was founded by Mr. Dale in 1785, that gentleman having erected the first of the present long range of mills, and constructed a subterraneous aqueduct, about one hundred yards in length, through the solid rock—by which means he brought the waters of the Clyde on to the sloping plain on which the mills and the village now stand. The 'Institution,' as it is called, is the school for the whole village, where the proprietors compel the inhabitants to send all their children from the age of three to thirteen. The great (and by many considered mistaken) philanthropist, Owen, was long a principal proprietor of these extensive mills; he made great efforts and sacrifices for the good of his work-people, and it is to him that the inhabitants owe their present educational institution, which, in its effects and results as regards the morals of this community, have worked admirably. The factories of New Lanark, and its instructive establishment, are now objects of curiosity to all tourists; and indeed strangers would deprive themselves of much gratification if they left this part of the country without paying them a visit.

LEADHILLS, CRAWFORD AND CRAWFORD-JOHN.

LEADHILLS is a village in the parish of Crawford, 46 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 44 S. from Glasgow, 15 E. from Douglas Mill, and 16 N. from Thornhill, situate in the alpine region, amidst a wilderness of dismal heathy mountains, on the road from Glasgow to Dumfries. It derives its name from being the residence of workmen employed in the lead mines, which are the most valuable of any in Scotland, and perhaps in Britain: the mines, which are farmed by a company from the Earl of Hopetoun, have produced in some years 18,000 bars, at nine stone avoirdupois the bar, in the year 1809, 25,200 bars were produced, which, at £32 per ton (the then price), amounts to £45,360; the ore dug from these mines affords a very liberal proportion of silver. Gold was found in the sand of the mountains at an early period: during the reign of James VI of Scotland, Sir Bevis Bulmer, a German, by order of Queen Elizabeth, was sent to collect gold dust in the waters of Elvan and Glengouar, with which they were said to abound; he had a house at Wanlockhead, where he deposited the fruits of his labour: the attempt was revived by the late Lord Hopetoun, but soon discontinued, as the product was inadequate to the expense. It was at Leadhills that Allan Ramsay, the poet, was born and spent his earliest years. Fairs are held on the second Friday of June and the last Friday of October

CRAWFORD is a small village in the parish of its name, eight miles from Leadhills, situate on the main road between Glasgow and Carlisle; it contains a good inn and the parish church, which latter was enlarged and improved in 1836. The name is said to be derived from the British compound Craw-ford, signifying the 'passage' or the 'road of blood'; an appellation supposed to have been obtained from this locality having been the scene of some bloody contest between the people of the country and their Roman invaders.

CRAWFORD-JOHN is a parish in the upper part of Clydesdale, contiguous to the foregoing parish, and on the east of Muirkirk and Douglas. The small river named Duncaton water takes its rise at the head of this district. On the top of Netherton Hill are the vestiges of an extensive encampment, and in other parts of the parish are the ruins of two ancient castles. At Snarshead, in this neighbourhood, a lead mine was lately opened, and is now being wrought with apparent success. The village, which is insignificant, is situate about a mile and a half south-west of the mail road, and about eight miles north from Leadhills; with the exception of the parish church and school, it contains nothing worthy of notice.

POST OFFICE, LEADHILLS, James Martin, Post Master.—Letters to EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, CARLISLE, &c. are despatched (by foot to meet the day mail train upon the Caledonian Railway at ABINGTON,) at about half-past ten in the morning, and arrives from ABINGTON about two in the afternoon.

LESMAHAGO, KIRKFIELD-BANK,

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LESMAHAGO (or as it is more popularly called ABBEY GREEN), is a village in the parish of its name, 12 miles S.E. from Hamilton, 6 N.W. from Douglas Mill, and the same distance S.W. from Lanark; situated on the west bank of the Nethan, in a district abounding in coal, lime and freestone. In obtaining and working these minerals a considerable number of the inhabitants find employment—whilst many others are occupied in weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers. Besides the parish church there is a free church, an united and a reformed presbyterian chapel, and some well conducted schools. The Western Bank of Scotland has a branch here, and there is also a savings' bank. The village is now well lighted with gas.

The noble ruins of Craig Nethan, or Dauphane Castle, the property of Lord Douglas, are well deserving the notice of the tourist. A room is still shown where it is said the unfortunate Queen Mary took refuge after her escape from Loch Leven Castle. A few fairs are held annually, but they are merely devoted to holiday amusements.

KIRKFIELD-BANK is a village in Lesmahago parish—about five miles E. from that village, and one mile west from Lanark, situated on the high road to Glasgow. The Clyde is crossed at this place by a fine stone bridge erected by subscription. Its people are chiefly employed in weaving, though extensive preparations are being made for carpet manufacturing; in the vicinity is the far famed cataract 'Stonebyres,' which like Corra, consists of three leaps, altogether eighty-two feet high. At a short distance is Stonebyre House enclosed in woods, the property of Colonel Monteath Douglas, C.B., the original fabric of this building has been nearly all replaced by a most elegant and enlarged erection. The house is approached by a pretty stone bridge under which flows a small rivulet, and the gardens are in the highest state of cultivation. Few parishes possess such scenery for fertility, and beauty, or such store of subterraneous treasures.

POST OFFICE, Robert Telfer, Post Master—Letters from all parts arrive (from LANARK) every morning at a quarter before four, and are despatched thereto every evening at twenty minutes before nine.

RUTHERGLEN.

RUGLEN, as it is commonly called, is a small town and ancient royal burgh in the parish of its name, situate two miles and a half south-east from Glasgow, and nine west from Hamilton. The town consists of one principal street, and a few lanes; it is distinguished by any staple manufacture, but in its vicinity collieries are wrought, and chemical and dye works are in operation. Rutherglen was erected into a royal burgh in the year 1126, by King David I; by his charter, the inhabitants enjoyed many privileges. At that period, small craft came up the Clyde to Rutherglen quay; Glasgow, however, by its superior consequence, arising from its trade and manufactures, absorbed the privileges and enrostered the traffic of this burgh. and the Broomielaw has for years been the station of all external commerce. The burgh is governed by a provost, two bailiffs, a treasurer, and fifteen councillors; it contains a prison; and a monthly court is held; it unites with Dumbarton, Kilmarnock, Port Glasgow, and Rentrew, in sending a representative to the legislature. Rutherglen gives the title of Earl to the Marquess of Queensberry. The fairs of this town have long been noted for a great show of horses, particularly the Lanarkshire breed, esteemed the best for draught in Scotland; they are held on the first Friday after the fourth of May, first Tuesday after the fourth of June, first Friday after the twenty-fifth of July, first Friday after the twenty-fifth of August, first Wednesday and Friday, and the Friday after the twenty-fifth of November.

SHOTTS AND CAMBUSNETHAN.

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CLELAND, WISHAW AND SALYSBURGH.

THE parish of Shotts lies in the north-east quarter of the county, and is 14 miles in length by about 10 in breadth; bounded by New Monkland on the north, Bothwell on the west, Cambusnethan on the south, and the county of Linlithgow on the east; the Avon and the Avon have their sources within the district, which is likewise watered by the streams of the North and South Calder, running through the extensive reservoir and Lilly Loch which supplies the Forth and Clyde canal, as likewise several mills. This parish abounds in coal and ironstone. The original name is said to be derived from that of a noted robber, Bertram, or Bartram, the Rob Roy of his day; he was shot in the reign of Robert II., about half a mile east from the church, which spot still retains the appellation Shotts-burn. The village of CLELAND is in this parish in which the Omoa Iron Works are situated, there is also a very neat school, and school-house, the site for which was given by the proprietor, and built by subscription, and is now supported partly by the proprietor. The village, called Kirk-o'-Shotts, stands on the south road, betwixt Edinburgh and Glasgow, in a bare and elevated part of the district, fifteen miles from Glasgow and twenty-seven from Edinburgh. The present church was erected in 1820, in the centre of the parish, on a commanding site.

The works of the Shotts Iron Company, are situate about three miles and a half east of the church; a great number of hands are employed in this establishment; the company patronize a school, and provide a house rent-free for the master. There is another school here, endowed by the late Mr. Wilson, of Whiteburn.

CAMBUSNETHAN parish is situate in the middle ward of the county, on the north-east bank of the Clyde, from which it stretches, in an eastern direction, a distance of thirteen miles, by three in breadth. There are luxuriant orchards throughout this district, and the apples of Cambusnethan have long been in high estimation. Freestone, ironstone and coal abound beneath the surface of the land. In this parish are the extensive Coltness Iron Works, also two places of worship of the establishment, a free church, two for the united, and one for the reformed presbyterians, likewise three schools, one of which is patronized by the Coltness Iron Co., the others being the parochial and Wilson's endowed. The village stands on a cross road a little eastward of the thoroughfare from Glasgow to Lanark, fifteen miles from the former and ten from the latter town. The large village of WISHAW (in which there is an extensive distillery), is in this parish in which stands Wishaw Castle, the residence of Lord Belhaven, whose extensive grounds extend some distance into the parish of Shotts.

STRATHAVEN,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF GLASSFORD AND STONEHOUSE.

STRATHAVEN is a market town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Avendale; 44 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 15 S. by E. from Glasgow, 30 N.E. from Ayr, 21 E. by N. from Kilmarnock, 14 W. from Lanark, and 7½ S. from Hamilton; situate on the river Aven. The town is of considerable antiquity—but possesses no pretensions to elegance in its dwellings, or uniformity in the arrangement of them. Like many other towns, not only in the British Islands, but throughout the European continent, it seems to have been indebted for its origin to the feudal eras, when every chieftain had his castle or fortress for safety or aggression; the ruins of one of these frowning edifices, presenting ‘shattered and haggard walls,’ stand on an eminence to the south, overhanging Strathaven. The excellent breed of horses for which Lanarkshire is so much distinguished was introduced to this vicinity, upwards of a century ago, by a Duke of Hamilton, who brought some fine horses from Holstein, and placed them in the parks attached to the castle; from this origin, the race of draught cattle was propagated over the entire district. The off-spring of the cow has also conferred distinction on this town: the herbage of the neighbourhood is supposed to be of a highly nutritious quality, and peculiarly adapted for the improvement of the flesh and milk of cattle; in consequence of this, Straven veal has long been held in high estimation, and a Straven calf is not unfrequently sold at almost as high a price as a cow reared upon some less favoured pasture. Strathaven is not a place of much trade; the most prominent branches are cheese dealing and the weaving process of cotton goods; there are two or three inns, and two banking establishments. The town was erected into a burgh of barony in the year 1450, in favour of the then powerful chief, William Earl Douglas, and is governed by a baron baillie.

Besides the national church, there are two relief chapels, an united associate synod meeting-house, and a chapel for independents. On the south side of the river Aven, a Roman road can be distinctly traced for several miles. Races are held annually in July, but one day generally terminates the amusements. The market, which is on Thursday, is well attended; fairs are held on the first Thursdays of January and March, Thursday in Whitsun week, the last Thursday of June, the second Thursday of August, and (‘the old fair’) on the second of November.

GLASSFORD village, in the parish of its name, is situate on the road betwixt Kibride and Strathaven, two miles from the latter town. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the cotton manufacture.

The village of STONEHOUSE is seven miles and a half from the town of Hamilton, situate near the south bank of the Aven. A little above the junction of the Kype water with that river is a beautiful and romantic waterfall, descending nearly fifty feet.

LINLITHGOWSHIRE.

OR WEST LOTHIAN, is a small county, of a very irregular figure, lying on the south shore of the Frith of Forth, having Edinburgshshire on the east and south-east, Lanarkshire on the south-west, and Stirlingshire on the west. The Brieche and the Almond waters form the boundary line betwixt this county and that of Edinburgh, except at Mid-Calder, where the latter intrudes more than a mile into Linlithgowshire. From east to west (that is, along the shore of the Forth), the county extends sixteen miles; along its south-eastern boundary (or from Queensferry to its most eastern point), it measures about twenty: the superficial contents of the whole being about one hundred and twenty square miles or seventy-six thousand eight hundred statute acres.

EARLY HISTORY.—Much that is applicable to the antiquities of, and historical events connected with, this county, has been already sufficiently detailed in the annals of Edinburgshshire and the capital—this district having formed, at an early period, a portion of the province of Lothian possessed by the Anglo-Saxons: some few particulars, more distinctly referable to this county, may, however, be here added. The Gadenii tribe of British people being overrun by the Romans, the latter formed a firm but not permanent settlement in the shire; the subjugated nations of the world had snapped their fetters—they even menaced the extinction of the Roman name; the legions were recalled to avert the catastrophe, and Britain was left exposed to the devastations of her more ferocious neighbours. During the residence of the Romans in West Lothian, which was the outermost part of their conquest in this direction, they gave a site to the wall which they built across the island. No part of Valentia was so well protected by forts. From the station at Cramond, a Roman road proceeded westward, along the shore of the Forth to Carriden, where the wall terminated; and along the sea shore were several posts, which, according to old historians were strengthened by towers, and stood the Bulwarks of the Roman sway in this part of Britain. In modern times there have been a variety of urns, coins and other relics of this conquering race discovered in the shire. It is understood that after the departure of the Romans and a good deal later, this part of Lothian became occupied by the Scots-Irish and northern adventurers, in greater numbers than in that portion now called Edinburgshshire.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The aggregate surface of Linlithgowshire is neither flat nor hilly: the most remarkable protuberances form a range running obliquely across the middle of the county; the central and western parts have the most hilly ground, while on the east and south the land is mostly level. The elevations are generally well clothed with verdure and ornamental woods; about one-third part of the whole county is either woodland, old pasture, or laid down with artificial grasses; and there are more than four-fifths of the shire enclosed. Until the year 1723, there was little improvement in the agriculture of the district; soon after this period, John, Earl of Stair introduced new and advantageous modes of husbandry, and commenced the cultivation of the cabbage, turnip and carrot by the plough; the example of this nobleman was beneficially followed by Charles, first Earl of Hopetoun; but both dying, thirty years elapsed before agricultural spirit was again actively displayed. In more recent times, some practical farmers, possessing the advantages of skill and capital, have brought the cultivation of the shire to comparative perfection; and now this rich and lovely district participates in the general improvements of southern Caledonia. With the exception of Cairnapple, in the parish of Torphichen, which rises about fifteen hundred feet above the level of the sea, the mountains of this district are not of great altitude, nor are they numerous—Binny Craig and Cocklerue are the only other eminences that attract notice; they are respectively about five hundred feet high.

MINERALS AND MANUFACTURES.—Linlithgowshire contains a store of minerals of the most useful kind: coal abounds throughout, limestone is equally prevalent, in some parts ironstone is also found in profusion, and the whole surface seems to rest on a bed of sandstone of the finest quality; silver and lead mines were formerly wrought; and there is plenty of marl, potters' clay, brick clay, and red chalk. Many places present volcanic appearances, particularly at Dundas Hill, in the parish of Dalmeny, where there is a bold front of Basaltic rocks, exhibiting in some instances columns of that character. Of the MANUFACTURES of the shire, salt is the chief article; and there are considerable tanneries, breweries, distilleries and chemical works in the principal towns. The traffic in coal employs a great number of the inhabitants. This county is rather remarkable for the state of its population, having undergone less increase in its amount within the last eight years than most other districts, especially those which are more favoured by being the seat of manufactures. Besides this, the circumstance of stagnation, or at least but slow progress in population, may be attributed to its scarcity of large towns, and the general dependence on agriculture under a steady mode of farming.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—The only river of consequence is the Almond (or Amond); but there are a number of considerable rivulets and burns, and the Forth yields advantages which amply compensate for the deficiency of river navigation. The Almond rises in the high grounds of Lanarkshire, and, pursuing a north-easterly course, falls into the sea at Cramond: at its mouth it assumes the appearance of a little loch or arm of the sea, running up the bottom of a woody ravine; but it is not navigable except for a very short distance, and that only for boats and small sloops. The main line of RAILWAY that passes through this county is the Edinburgsh and Glasgow; it runs to Linlithgow, Uphall, and Whitburn; passes three miles from Bo'ness and four from Queensferry. Bathgate is communicated with by a branch; so is Bo'ness by one from the Slamannan line.

DIVISIONS AND REPRESENTATION, &c.—This county was probably separated into a sheriffdom in the reign of David I; it was placed by Robert, however, under the administration of a constable, and so it continued until the time of James IV. No other district appears to have been so divided into petty baronies, bailieries, regalities, and other independent jurisdictions; nor so domineered over by a number of peers inimical to peace and regardless of justice. The oldest family in the shire is that of Dundas, of Dundas, who can trace an unbroken line of descent and residence on the same spot up to the reign of William the Lion (1165), an antiquity rarely to be found surpassed, not only in Scotland, but in any other country. Linlithgowshire comprises eleven parishes and two parts of parishes, which, with two in Mid-Lothian and four in Stirlingshire, form one presbytery. It contains two royal burghs, namely, Linlithgow and Queensferry; the next largest town is Bathgate. Its seaport is Bo'ness, and there are a number of thriving villages. The burghs of Linlithgow, Hamilton, Lanark, Airdrie and Falkirk, in conjunction, send one member to the imperial parliament, and the shire at large another.

POPULATION OF THE SHIRE, IN THE YEARS 1801, 1811, 1821, 1831 AND 1841.

BATHGATE,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF ARMADALE, WEST CRAIGS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BATHGATE is a market town, an independent burgh of barony, and a parish; situated on the middle road betwixt Edinburgh and Glasgow, 18 miles w. from the former, 24 e. from the latter, and between five and six s. from Linlithgow. It is a station on the Bathgate Branch of the Edinburgh and Glasgow railway, and occupies a pleasant site, near the southern base of a great ridge of hills, extending across the county and sheltering the town on the north and east; while it has a fine southern exposure, and is seen at a considerable distance from that direction and from the west. Bathgate lays claim to comparatively high antiquity: Malcolm IV granted to the monks of Holyrood the church of Bathkel, with the land belonging to it; at one period the town and its adjoining lands formed part of the ample possessions of Robert Bruce, which in 1306 he gave in dowry with his daughter Margery to Walter Stewart—and this marriage introduced the Stewart family to the throne of Scotland. The town consists of a new and an old part, the former is tolerably well-built and most of the streets are paved, it is abundantly supplied with water of an excellent quality, the property of the burgh; and is lighted with gas, furnished by a joint-stock company. Bathgate was created a free burgh of barony by act of parliament in 1824, and placed under the control of a provost, three bailies, twelve councillors, a treasurer, a town clerk, and a procurator fiscal; the election of the magistrates takes place annually in September, by the burgesses: and a justice of peace court sits monthly. Of late years the town has acquired a large increase of population, in a great measure owing to the adjacent lime and coal works, but more particularly to the introduction of weaving cotton goods for the Glasgow manufacturers, which latter trade is conducted by resident agents.

The places of worship are a church of the establishment, a free church, and others for burgher, relief, and united secession congregations. The burgh now boasts a superior educational institution in the Bathgate Academy, endowed by the late John Newland, Esq., of Kingston, Jamaica, who was a native of this town; the munificent sum bequeathed by this gentleman amounted, previous to the erection of the building, to between £16,000 and £17,000. The academy, which is now fully established, stands on a commanding and healthful site, in the immediate vicinity of the town, and is an elegant and extensive structure—it comprises five large class-rooms, library-room, and rector's house. The courses of education are conducted on the most approved systems by a rector and other teachers. The youth of the parish have thus the benefit of a first-rate instruction in all the useful and many of the more learned branches, free of expense; while others, not parishioners, have an opportunity of participating in the same advantage by means of very moderate fees. The parish school-house, which is situated near the academy, has a handsome appearance. The market day is Friday, when a large supply of grain of all kind is brought from the surrounding country. The authorities of the burgh are entitled to hold seven annual fairs—namely, on the third Wednesday in April, July and August, the first Wednesdays after Whitsuntide and Martinmas, and the fourth Wednesdays in June and October—all old style; the Whitsuntide and Martinmas fairs are the principal, and are well attended by cattle-dealers.

ARMADALE is a small village in the parish of, and two miles west from, Bathgate, on the main road from Edinburgh to Glasgow, about half-way between the two cities. The place took its name from an estate, then the property of Sir W. Honeyman, in the neighbourhood, whose predecessor, was a senator of the College of Justice, with the title of Lord Armadale. The nearest place of worship is at Bathgate.

WEST CRAIGS is a small hamlet in the parish of Torphichen, about five miles and a half from Bathgate, seated in an agricultural district. The nearest place of worship stands five miles from the village; but a new church is to be erected.

BORROWSTOUNNESS,

AND THE PARISH OF CARRIDEN, WITH THE VILLAGES OF GRANGE PANS & BLACKNESS

BORROWSTOUNNESS (or, as it is now generally pronounced, Bo'ness), is an ancient sea-port, burgh of barony and parish; the town is 18 miles w. from Edinburgh, 9 w. from Queensferry, and three and a half from Linlithgow; situated on the south shore of the Frith of Forth on a piece of low ground; and consists principally of one street, the greater proportion of the houses forming which appear to be of a very old date. The harbour is good and safe; and, before the canal from Grangemouth to Glasgow was completed, the port of Bo'ness was the only commodious one on this coast for foreign vessels to discharge their cargoes at. Among other advantages and conveniences belonging to the harbour, that of moderate port charges, and a patent slip of the best construction, may be mentioned: by the latter, vessels of from three to four hundred tons burthen may be drawn out of the water, and the cradle will admit two at once; this important erection is under the superintendence of the harbour-master. A branch of the Slamannan railway is in the course of construction to this port. Bo'ness is the chief place on the Forth for the manufacture of salt, of which article a considerable quantity is exported annually; besides these works, there are a distillery, an earthenware manufactory, and chemical works; and at Kinneil, about half a mile westward are extensive iron works, which afford employment to not fewer than fifteen hundred persons. At these works are four blast furnaces for smelting the ore, with which as well as that of coal the Kinneil estate abounds. The Duke of Hamilton is superior of the burgh, and he appoints a baillie for its government.

The places of worship are a church of the establishment, a free church, and a chapel for an united secession congregation. The Roman wall of Antoninus, commonly called 'Graham's Dyke,' passes through the parish; and within a short distance of the town, to the south-east, the traces of a Roman camp are still visible. The village of BORROWSTOUN lies about a mile inland from Bo'ness.

The parish of CARRIDEN is bounded by Bo'ness on the west, Abercorn on the east, and Linlithgow on the south; it lies on the south bank of the Forth, and is not more than two miles in length by one in breadth; the whole district is well enclosed and cultivated.

Within the parish of Carriden, besides its own village are those of GRANGE-PANS and BLACKNESS; the latter once celebrated for its castle, which, during the reign of James VI. was the principal state prison in Scotland, and as such received within its gloomy walls many distinguished persons; one of the most remarkable of its prisoners was Lord Ochiltree, who, for accusing the Marquess of Hamilton of aspiring to the Scottish crown, was here confined during nearly the whole reign of Charles I.—upwards of twenty years—and was not liberated till the country fell under the dominion of Cromwell. The edifice was converted to the purposes of a barrack in the course of the late long-protracted war; it is still preserved in a sufficient degree of repair for the accommodation of a master gunner and barrack-master.

LINLITHGOW AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

LINLITHGOW, popularly pronounced Lithgow, is an ancient royal burgh, the capital of the shire and parish of its name, and the seat of the pre-bytory of Linlithgow; 16 miles w. from Edinburgh, 31 E. by N. from Glasgow, 8 E. from Falkirk, and three and a half from Br'nness; seated on the bank of a fine lake, and on the Edinburgh and Glasgow railway, for which line a principal station is established here. It is chiefly formed of a single street, which lies east and west along the south edge of the water. The houses have, in general, an old and decayed, but yet substantial look, which indicate that the place at a former time enjoyed great prosperity; and it still possesses a variety of objects that cannot fail to interest the attentive traveller, and impress the mind with an idea of its ancient grandeur. Amongst these are the magnificent ruins of its royal palace, the venerable church adjoining, and the terrace on which both edifices were erected; the beautiful lake, the lofty trees, and the plantations scattered over the pleasure-grounds of its once famed palace. The latter stands on the site of a Roman station, and forms a square overlooking the lake to the north; it has been one of the noblest residences of royalty in Scotland; in it the unfortunate Mary Queen of Scots was born, 8th December, 1542. Among the ancient dwellings a particular house here is pointed out to strangers as the place from whence Hamilton of Bothwell-haugh, shot the regent Murray;

as is also the room in which the spectre is said to have appeared to King James, warning him to keep from the battle of Flodden Field. The ancient town house—an elegant structure, erected in 1688, was destroyed by fire in 1847, but a new one was immediately built, and contains a council chamber, and justice of peace and baillie court rooms, &c. To the north of this stands the county hall, wherein are various apartments for the sheriff and other public functionaries. The hall, which is handsome and convenient, contains faithful full-length portraits of the late General Earl of Hopetoun, and of his brother, Sir Alexander Hope, both distinguished officers. In the reign of David I. Linlithgow became a burgh of regality: James V. vested the government of it in a provost and four bailies—the council being formed of twenty-seven 'merchant councillors,' now chosen by the £10 constituency. The burgh unites with Lanark, Hamilton, Airdrie and Falkirk in sending one member to the imperial parliament. Immediately opposite to the town-house is a fountain of singular and beautiful appearance, completed on the 4th of June, 1807, in imitation of the Cross Well, built in 1620: it is of hexagonal form, ascended by steps; the water descends from the top of the fountain, which is surmounted by an unicorn holding a shield; the stream falls into a basin, from whence it is spouted into a larger one through the mouths of six grotesque figures, whence it again issues through the jaws of six other images into a still more capacious receptacle, which is surrounded by statues attired in male and female ancient costumes; here all the streams are concentrated, and pass unperceived through a pillar—finding egress by another mouth in a copious gush, from which the inhabitants are supplied with water. The whole of this architectural curiosity is surrounded by iron palisades of light and elegant workmanship. Several other fountains, of simple formation, are to be seen in the town.

The soldiers of Cromwell are said to have introduced into this town the art of preparing leather—and tanning, currying, and shoe making, may to this day be deemed the staples of the place. In the tanning and currying branches, are several large establishments, the principal of which belong to Messrs. R. Spence & Co., Messrs. T. Nimmo & Co., and Messrs. Callender & Co. The Union canal passes close by the south side of the town: an extensive basin of excellent masonry offers commodious accommodation to vessels trading on this canal; and a beautiful aqueduct, unsurpassed in the united kingdom, conducts its water on twelve arches, over the river Avon and a deep and extensive valley. The railway before-mentioned passes along the south side of the main street. Near to the bridge, about a mile to the west, the line is carried over the Avon by means of a stupendous viaduct of nineteen arches, of substantial masonry. This structure, with the aqueduct, greatly excite the observation of the traveller.

The parish church of St. Michael is situated contiguous to the palace ruins, and is a noble pile of Gothic architecture, with a fine tower steeple: in this church is the seat formerly reserved for the monarchs of Scotland. The other places of worship are a free church, two united secession chapels and one for independents. There are several good educational establishments both public and private—boarding and day. The grammar school is well conducted, and there is a very useful charity school, erected and endowed by the benevolence of Mrs. Douglas, sister of the late venerable and lamented Dr. Dobbie, minister of this parish. The market is held on Friday, and the fairs on the first Friday after the second Tuesday of January; February 25th, the third Friday in April, the second Tuesday in June, August 2nd, and the first Friday in November.

QUEENSFERRY.

QUENSFERRY, as it is sometimes called, SOUTH QUEENSFERRY (in contradistinction to North Queensferry, a harbour in Fifeshire), is a royal burgh and parish, the latter being confined within the limits of the former; 9 miles west from Edinburgh, the same distance east from Bo'ness; and 4 south-east from Ratho, a station on the Edinburgh and Glasgow railway; situated betwixt the shore of Frith of Forth and the ridge that rises from the coast. It is a place of considerable antiquity, having received its name from the queen of Malcolm Canmore (Margaret), who usually made choice of the ferry at this place for the passage of the Frith. Under her auspices the town increased in size, population and commerce; but in the present day it is not conspicuous for either: it has no foreign trade, and through the winter it is chiefly supported by fishing. Some little consequence belongs to it from being the ferry at Newhall (a little to the eastward of the town) over the Forth; there is another pier a short distance to the westward, for the convenience of boats when they cannot make the former point: they are both handsome slips or piers, and run a considerable distance into the water, whereby boats can effect a landing of passengers at all times of the tide. At this place the Frith is contracted to a gut of two miles in width; and in the middle of the strait lies a small rocky island, called Luch Garvie. About half a mile to the westward is Port Edgar, so named from Prince Edgar having landed there; from this place his Majesty George IV, when on a visit to Scotland, embarked on his return to England.

As a royal burgh, Queensferry is governed by a provost, a land baillie, two sea baillies, a dean of guild and a town council; the burgh unites with Stirling, Culross, Inverkeithing, and Dunfermline, in returning one member to parliament. The Right Hon. the Earl of Roseberry having given a piece of ground for a bleach-green to the inhabitants, and also conveyed water into the town for their use, the magistrates and council, to evince their gratitude for these favours, have raised a tablet, with an appropriate inscription, over the fount.
The places of worship are a church of the establishment and a chapel for united presbyterians. A parochial school and one for infants' with two or three private schools, are the educational establishments. A fair is held on the 5th of August, except when that date falls on a Saturday or a Monday; when this happens, the fair is held on Friday or Tuesday.

UPHALL WITH BROXBURN, AND ECCLESMACHAN.

THE parish of UPHALL, is bounded by Kirkliston on the north-east and east, by Mid-Caldor on the south, Livingston on the west, and Linlithgow and Ecclesmachan on the north. It is intersected from west to east by the road from Glasgow to Edinburgh; and is watered by a rivulet called BROXBURN, on which and the public road stands the straggling village of that name, at the distance of ten miles from Edinburgh and seven from Linlithgow. The western extremity of the village is crossed by the Union canal from Edinburgh. A church of the establishment is at Uphall, and one for a free congregation at Broxburn. In the chancel of Uphall church are deposited the remains of the Hon. Henry Erskine, as also those of the late Lord Chancellor Erskine. This parish abounds in coal, sandstone, limestone and ironstone. The district is chiefly of an upland character; but it is under the best process of agriculture and enclosure, and possesses some large plantations.

The small parish of ECCLESMACHAN lies south of Abercorn and east of Linlithgow, about five miles from the latter town and two from Uphall: it is four miles in length by only one in breadth; is watered by a tributary of the Almond; and near the church is a weak sulphureous spring, called the Bullion Well, the waters of which are said to be efficacious in cures of scrofula. There is a church of the establishment in the parish, which is a flat corn country, altogether under cultivation, and based on freestone.

POST OFFICE, UPHALL, William Brown, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from EDINBURGH) every morning at nine, and evening at six, and are despatched thereto, at ten minutes before six in the morning, and afternoon at ten minutes before three.

WHITEBURN, BLACKBURN, LIVINGSTONE,

AND LONGRIDGE.

WHITEBURN, or WHITEBURN, is a parish and village—the latter 2½ miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 10 s. from Linlithgow, and four from Bathgate; situated on the south road from Edinburgh to Glasgow, and on the Edinburgh and Glasgow railway, for which line the company have a station here. It is a regularly built little place, and thrives by the weaving of cotton goods for the Glasgow houses. It contains a public library of twelve hundred volumes, and a handsome school-house—the latter built by the trustees of the late Mr. Wilson, who bequeathed a considerable part of his property for the laudable purpose of erecting and supporting charity schools in this district. Within the parish are two other villages, called EAST WHITEBURN and LONGRIDGE. The places of worship are the established church, and meeting houses for the united seceders, united presbyterians and burghers. The parish is watered by the Almond, the Brierch, and two smaller rivulets. There is much moss and pasture land in the upper portion; in the lower division, on the contrary, the surface is arable, and admirably planted and enclosed.

The parish of LIVINGSTONE stretches from five to six miles along the north bank of the Brierch water, which separates it from Edinburghshire, by a breadth of from three to four miles. One of the roads from Edinburgh to Glasgow passes through the parish—which is well enclosed. The hamlet of Livingstone, which consists of only a few detached dwellings, is six miles from Whiteburn; and two miles from Livingstone is the small village of BLACKBURN, seated on the banks of a rivulet so named: it contains a cotton mill, which employs a considerable number of persons of both sexes. Fairs, the first Tuesday in May, and the first Thursday after the second Tuesday in September, for cattle, horses, and hiring farm servants.

NAIRNSHIRE.

THIS is a small maritime county in the north-eastern part of Scotland, once forming a portion of the ancient province of Moray. It is bounded on the north by the Moray Frith, on the east by the shire of Elgin (or Moray), and on the south and west by the county of Inverness. It extends from the coast, on the north, to the small lake of Lochindorb (situate at its extreme southern apex), on the south, twenty miles; the breadth along the shore is twelve miles, and its sides vary from twelve to twenty-two miles asunder. The shire comprises one hundred and ninety-five square miles of land, and three of lakes; of uncultivated land there are about eighty-seven thousand acres, and of cultivated about thirty-seven thousand, eight hundred.

SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The agricultural properties of Nairnshire assimilate so closely with those of the county of Elgin (described at page 410), that but brief notice of its wealth and capabilities in this respect is here necessary. Exclusive of the hilly part of the district, it may be described as a narrow border of level ground, along the shore, from one to nearly six miles in breadth—and here, for the most part, it is arable; but as the country recedes farther from the coast, it becomes bleak and hilly: there are, however, no eminences of great altitude or note in the whole county. The farms are usually small, and most frequently unenclosed. Sheep and black cattle are reared in considerable numbers, and chiefly fed on the natural pasturage. The county is crossed, in its southern or hilly part, by the river Findhorn, which runs in a direction from south-west to north-east; parallel with this rapid stream, about eight or nine miles to the west, courses the river Nairn, which also runs into the Moray Frith. Besides the Rivers, there are several small brooks, whose banks are covered with woods and plantations; and there are some elegant seats scattered over the country.

Small as this shire is, it possesses a distinct political and judicial establishment. It comprises three complete parochial divisions, with seven parts of parishes; and contains one royal burgh, NAIRN, which is the only town. This burgh, in conjunction with Inverness, Fortrose and Forres, sends one member to parliament; and the County unites with Elginshire in returning another representative.

(b) Croy parish is partly in Inverness-shire; the whole contains 1,684 inhabitants.

(c) The parish of Daviot and Dunlichity is chiefly in Inverness-shire, and was there wholly entered until the census for 1831 and 1841; the entire parish contains 1,681 inhabitants.

(d) The united parishes of Dyke and Moy are, with the exception of thirteen inhabitants (taken in Nairnshire in 1831, and 7, in 1841), in the shire of Elgin; the entire parish contains 1,366 inhabitants.

(e) The united parishes of Moy and Dalrossie are mostly in Inverness-shire; they contain 1,749 inhabitants.

(f) Petty parish was wholly entered with Inverness-shire until 1831, when eighty-three inhabitants were returned as resident in the county of Nairn; the entire parish contains 1,749 inhabitants.

(g) Urquhart parish is partly in Ross-shire; and contains in the whole 3,104 inhabitants.

The total annual value of Real Property in this county, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £14,902; but this is exclusive of parts of the parishes of Daviot and Dunlichity, Dyke and Moy, Petty and Urquhart, for which no assessment appears in the government returns for Nairnshire; the value of the these parishes will appear in the counties to which they chiefly belong. The amount assessed to the Property Tax for Nairnshire in 1843, was £16,766 2s. 11d.

NAIRN,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF AULDEARN, CAWDOR, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

NAIRN is a royal burgh, the capital of its county and its parish 155 miles N. from Edinburgh, 103 W. by N. from Aberdeen, 32 W. from Fochabers, 23 W. from Elgin, 18 N.E. from Inverness, and 11 E. from Forres; situated on the coast of the Moray Frith, upon the left bank of the Nairn, at the confluence of that river with the sea. The town is composed of one main street (High-street), and several inferior streets and lanes. Approaching the town from the west, is seen the Nairn hospital, a handsome building erected by subscription in 1846. Near the centre of High-street is a spacious structure erected about 1818, containing the town and county gaol, and a town and county court-room; the latter, which is spacious and elegant, is occasionally used as a ball-room: the pile which is built of fine freestone (obtained in great plenty in the neighbourhood), is surmounted by a spire. The town is connected with the right bank of the Nairn by a good bridge, which, as well as the harbour, and a handsome pier erected by subscription (aided by government), were, in the year 1829, much injured by the calamitous Moray floods. For a good sea port town Nairn enjoys certain advantage—obtained from a fertile country yielding various articles proper for exportation; and were the harbour a good one, encouragement would be given to establish a ferry between Nairn and Cromarty which would open an intercourse between the country on the northern and southern sides of the Firth. The exports at present consist of timber, corn, potatoes, eggs, smoked haddocks, herrings and freestone. The imports are groceries, hardware, lime and coal. Three branch banking establishments are settled here and also two national security-savings banks. The herring fishery and curing process is carried on successfully, and salmon fishing is also prosecuted. About a mile to the east is the celebrated 'Royal Brackla Distillery' a very extensive establishment, long famous for the excellence of its whisky.

At what period Nairn was erected into a royal burgh is uncertain; the oldest charter extant is that obtained from James VI. in the year 1589, being the renewal of one granted by Alexander; Charles II confirmed the charter of James, and vested the government of the burgh in a town council, consisting of seventeen members, namely, the provost, three bailies, a dean of guild and treasurers, with eleven councillors, nine of which make a quorum; the whole of the trades form but one corporation. The burgh unites with Inverness, Fortrose and Forres in returning one member to parliament. A sheriff's court is held here weekly and a small debt court once fortnight. Nairn is much resorted to in summer for bathing; its beach is inviting, its bath-convenient, and the neighbourhood is decked with some fine scenery and studded with many agreeable residences.

The places of worship are the parish church, free, and united presbyterian churches, and an English episcopal and independent chapel. The town is well provided with institutions for instruction: in addition to the parochial establishment, there are free church and assembly schools and an elegant academy, for the education of more advanced pupils: there is likewise an excellent female school, well conducted and attended. Indeed as regards good and cheap education, Nairn merits a conspicuous station; it also possesses several religious, benevolent, and literary societies, which are respectably supported. At the western extremity of the town, adjoining the parish school, a neat monument was erected, some years since, to the memory of Mr. John Strath, who was forty years schoolmaster, as a tribute of respect by his numerous scholars. Markets are held every alternate Thursday, and the fairs on the third Friday of April, the 19th June, if Tuesday, or on the first Tuesday after the 19th; the 13th August, or on the first lawful day after the market of Campbelltown; on the fourth Tuesday of September; on the Friday after the third Tuesday of October, and on the first Friday of November.

AULDEARN, anciently called Erin is a parish and village—the latter a burgh of barony, is situated 2½ miles S.E. from Nairn. In the immediate neighbourhood of the village is the scene of a victory gained by the Marquess of Montrose over the forces of the covenanters. A church of the establishment and a free church are the places of worship; and the schools are one parochial and another for infants: the first mentioned establishment is conducted with very great ability by the present master.

About five miles west of Nairn is the interesting and picturesque village of CAWDOR—where, upon the banks of the river of its name, is an excellent inn frequented by tourists and families, who visit this spot to contemplate the charming scenery around, and the towers of the ancient castle—once the proud seat of the Thanes of Cawdor. It is now occupied as a hunting lodge by the Earl of Cawdor. The stranger is granted access to the interior of this interesting structure; where are seen vaulted chambers, spiral stair-cases, and tapestried rooms; and the chamber is shown where, according to Shakspeare, King Duncan was foully murdered by Macbeth. From the summit of the castle is commanded one of the most extensive and lovely views in this country; and many parties of the gay and the fashionable appreciate by their presence, in the summer and autumn, the various beauties of this favoured locality.

ORKNEY AND SHETLAND ISLES.

THE ORKNEY ISLES.

KKNOWN to the ancients by the name of Orcades, are situate in the Northern sea, separated from Caithness-shire, in Scotland, by the strait of the sea called the Pentland Frith, and lying between the parallels of  $58^{\circ} 44'$  and  $59^{\circ} 25'$  north latitude, and  $2^{\circ} 30'$  west longitude; from the coast of Scotland they are distant four leagues, and from the Shetland Isles about fifteen. The whole of the Orkneys have been estimated at 150,000 square acres; of these there were, at no distant date, 90,000 in uncultivated commons, 30,000 in field pastures and meadow, 24,000 in tillage (now much greater), and 4,000 covered with fresh water. The form of the islands, from the operations of the ocean, and the rapidity of the tides, is extremely irregular; and from these circumstances the dimensions of some of them are ascertained with difficulty. They are separated from one another by portions of water denominated 'sounds,' 'friths,' or 'ferries,' some of which are only a mile broad, whilst others are more than five: though thus closely connected together, the whole of them are of considerable extent; for, from the south-west to the north-east, the points farthest removed from each other, the distance is not less than seventy miles, and they are upwards of forty in another direction. The earliest inhabitants of these islands appear to have been Picts, a tribe originally Scandinavian, who, at an unknown period before the Christian era, established themselves in the northern and Western parts of Scotland. Diodorus Siculus mentions Cape Orcus as one of the extremities of Britain; and the Orcades are first named, in the second century, by Pomponius Mela, who states their number at thirty—Pliny augments them to forty, but Ptolomy makes them only thirty; Tacitus asserts that the Orcades were discovered and subdued by Agricola, which implies that they were then inhabited. The origin of the name is undoubtedly Teutonic, and is probably derived from Orkn, a large marine animal—a term that has been applied both to whales and seals: ORKNEY, therefore; appears to mean 'the land of whales' or of 'seals.' The Orcades seem to have been esteemed of some importance in the time of Constantine, as they are especially mentioned with Gaul and Britain as the patrimony of his youngest son. Little is known of the Orcades from that time until the convulsions in Norway, which ended in the elevation of Harold 'the Fair-Haired,' to the undivided sovereignty of that country. About the middle of the ninth century Kenneth Macalpin obtained possession of the islands, and they continued with the Scottish throne until the end of the eleventh century, when they were assigned by King Donald Bane to the King of Norway, to whom they were subject until the middle of the thirteenth century, when they were again transferred by Magnus, King of Norway, to Alexander, King of Scotland; but, although these islands were thus ceded, the Norwegians still asserted their right to them, until the year 1470, when James III of Scotland married Margaret, daughter of the King of Denmark, with whom they again passed, in lieu of her dowry, to the crown of Scotland; and upon the birth of her son, James IV, they were finally ceded, which was afterwards confirmed when James IV of Scotland married Ann, daughter of the King of Denmark. Subsequent to this period the islands passed into the possession of the English Crown, and were bestowed by Charles I, and afterwards by Charles II, on the Morton family; in 1776 Lord Morton sold them to Sir Lawrence Dundas, and they have since remained in the family of his descendant. Having been so long and so repeatedly in the possession of the Danes and Norwegians, many names of persons as well as places are derived from the Danish or Scandinavian language. It will be comprehended that the Orcadians bear no resemblance whatever to the Celtic Highlanders, in language, dress, appearance, or customs. The whole body of the inhabitants may be divided into three classes: the first consists of the gentry, or proprietors of land, with such as have gained a competent fortune by means of industry; the second is formed of those who are denominated tradesmen and shopkeepers; and the third comprises fishermen, and others for the most part employed in the cultivation of the soil, and are either farmers with servants, or what are termed cottars or cottagers. Orkney has given birth to some individuals who have attained to eminence in science, literature, and the arts; of these we may particularly allude to Malcolm Laing, Esq., author of a well-known History of Scotland, and Mrs. Brunton, authoress of 'Self-Control,' &c.

SOIL, PRODUCE, CLIMATE, &c.—Compared with the sterile wilds in some of the sister islands to the north, or even with the lofty hills and bleak marshy plains to the south of them, these isles gain so much that their appearance is favourable and inviting; to the eye their surface presents a rich and pleasing variety. It is conjectured by some (and there are circumstances which strongly tend to corroborate the conjecture) that these islands were, at some distant period, part of the main land of Scotland. The hills composing the ridge that skirts the Western Ocean, as well as those that intersect the Mainland, and occupy some of the other islands, are seldom single and detached, but for the most part are formed into ridges of some extent, with small intervening valleys; and their tops, instead of rising high into a conical form, are generally either flat or rounded. Some few of them are almost entirely covered with verdure; the bottoms of most of them consist of corn fields, interspersed with patches of rich old grass, affording excellent feeding for cattle; the soil is composed of sandy or clay loam: their sides produce an admirable mixture of heath and grass for sheep pasture, on a thin stratum of peat moss; while their tops are usually brown, on a bottom of peat moss, clay or gravel. There are spots on some of them delightfully romantic, where the attention is arrested and the ear pleased by the murmurs of the rills, and the eye feasted on flowers that shed their fragrance around. But what is of much more consequence, Providence, ever bountiful in adding to the comforts of man, has, with no sparing hand, spread peat moss over a considerable portion of these islands. The ancient rude modes of cultivation are now abandoned, and the implements of husbandry have been materially improved; but much of the land under tillage is not regularly fenced, nor divided into separate fields: the spirit of improvement is now, however, generally diffused throughout the islands, and regular enclosures are becoming more frequent. The grain almost exclusively cultivated in Orkney is either oats and beans, or an inferior sort of barley. The herring fishery, formerly introduced, is now considerably fallen off; the principal 'stations' are Papa Stronsay, Deersound, Holm, Burray, and South Ronaldshay. The markets are Ireland, Scotland, and England; a few only being sent abroad direct from Orkney, except the produce of the early fishery, which is carried on in the neighbourhood of Stromness—and from that place the herrings are despatched direct to Hamburg. The cod and ling fisheries are also prosecuted, by various descriptions of craft, from almost all the islands, and the quantity taken increases; but the withdrawal of the bounty has been severely felt by the islanders, who, in expectation (if not on the faith) of its continuance, had embarked their little all in boats or vessels for pursuing the fishery. CLIMATE.—Throughout the whole of the islands, rain falls in considerable quantity, especially on the western coasts; and it is supposed that the annual amount showered upon these islands averages twenty-six inches. Snows are neither so frequent nor so heavy; but they come with comparative violence, and generally from the north-west and south-east; but though what falls in the course of a year may not be much short of the quantity in other northern latitudes, it continues only a few days at a time on the surface of the earth. A peculiarity of the climate, with respect to the season of snow and hail, merits some attention:—some part of the month of June, which in Britain is well known to be of a pleasant and genial warmth, is here not only colder than the preceding months, but almost as much so as any month in winter; for two weeks, and even sometimes more, about the middle of June, the wind blows from the north, strong and piercing, accompanied with snow and hail showers; but as soon as that period is past, the wind veers round, and warm showers succeed.

According to a survey taken by Mr. Murdo Mackenzie, in 1750, the whole number of islands under the denomination of the Orkneys amounted to sixty-seven, of which the following twenty-nine only are inhabited:—Mainland (or Pomona), Græmsay, Hoy, Waas, Rassa, Fara, Cava, Flota, South Ronaldshay, Swaney, Pentland Skerry, Burray, Lambholm, Copinsay, Shapinsay, Stronsay, Papa Stronsay, Edey, Fairey, Sandey, North Ronaldshay, Westray, Papa Westray, Eglshay, Rousay, Weir, Enballow, Gairsay, and Ramsay: the remaining thirty-eight, which in the primitive language of the country are termed 'holms,' are much inferior in size, and solely appropriated to pasturage. The Orkneys comprise twenty-six parishes; the only two towns are Kirkwall, which is the capital and a royal burgh, and Stromness, a burgh of barony. The isles of Orkney and Shetland form one sheriffdom or stewartry; the duty is principally performed by the sheriff-depute, whose authority extends over all, whilst that of the sheriff substitute is confined to Shetland. Combined they form one county, under the title of the County of Orkney and Shetland, which returns one member to the imperial parliament. Kirkwall, the capital of the Orkneys, is a representative burgh, joining with Wick, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain, and Cromarty, in sending another member.

Note.—(a) Kirkwall, and also Stromness, are not included in the total population of Mainland parishes in 1841, but are entered separate.

(b) Eglshay island was included with Rousay in 1801:—in 1811 it contained 170; in 1821, 226; in 1831, 228; and in 1841, 196 inhabitants. Enballow was also included with Rousay in 1801 and 1811:—in 1821 it contained 11; in 1831, 20; and in 1841, 26 inhabitants. No returns were made for Gairsay in 1801 and 1811:—in 1821 it contained 79; in 1831, 69; and in 1841, 71 inhabitants.

(c) Burness parish is in the island of Sanda.

(d) Weir island was included with Rousay in 1801 and 1811.

(e) Flotta was included with Walls island in 1811.

The annual value of Real Property in the Orkney Isles, as assessed to the Poor Rates in 1815, amounted to £12,479.

KIRKWALL AND ITS VICINAGE.

KIRKWALL, the capital of the Orkney Islands and of the united parishes of Kirkwall and Saint Ola, is a town of great antiquity, a royal burgh, and the seat of a synod and presbytery: 353 miles from Edinburgh by land and 241 by steam-navigation, 58 from Wick, 54 from Thurso, 41 from Huna Ferry (the most northerly part of Great Britain), and 14 from Stromness; situated about the centre of an island, called, by way of pre-eminence, Mainland, or Pomona, and on the south-east of the bay of Kirkwall. The town bears strong characteristics of antiquity: the principal street is exceedingly inconvenient from its narrowness, being in some places barely wide enough to afford passage for a cart; the houses are generally arranged with their ends or gables towards the street, which gives the town a singular if not an awkward appearance; many of these houses, too, both externally and internally, present striking features of old age—the doors and windows are small, the walls of great thickness, and the apartments narrow and gloomy; the modern dwellings, however, from an exception to this style, and many of them vie with the most commodious habitations of any other place of the same extent in Scotland. The town is divided into two parts, respectively termed the Old Town and the New Town: the former bends along the bay, while the latter stretches a considerable way to the southward. A rivulet, which is crossed by a stone bridge of one arch, passes through the town. The most conspicuous building in Kirkwall is the cathedral of Saint Magnus, which majestically lifts its head, and excites the admiration of every stranger: it was founded by Ronald, Count of Orkney, in 1138, in honour of and dedicated to his uncle, Saint Magnus, and (though the work of different ages, and brought to completion under various superintendencies) must be admitted to be an edifice not only grand and simple, but also surprisingly regular and uniform—and is certainly a most imposing ornament and object of pride to these northern islands. On the east of, and near the cathedral stands a substantial building belonging to the establishment, and though several years have elapsed since its partial erection, it is still in an unfinished and comfortless state. A short distance east of this, just completed, is a large and handsome church belonging to the united presbyterians, and near it are the united original seceders church and the free church. There is also a congregationalist church. The ancient church of St. Ola, which it is believed existed prior to the foundation of that of St. Magnus, and was then the only religious establishment, stood near the shore of the road or bay of Kirkwall: around its site many of the houses are of such very antiquated appearance and construction as to allow of the conjecture that these dwellings, from their situation, originally obtained the appellation of Kirkioving, or the 'Kirk on the bay,' subsequently corrupted (or perhaps merely altered, in consequence of only the walls of the old church remain-) ing,) to Kirkwall. Opposite the cathedral, on the west side of the street, are the ruins of a fortress, called 'the King's Castle,' which time and the havoc of war have nearly levelled with the dust; it was a place of considerable strength in 1581, when, or soon after, it was occupied by the infamous Earl of Orkney, natural son of James V. Almost adjoining to the dilapidated fragments of this fortress stand the much more interesting and ancient remains of the bishop's palace.

Kirkwall was created a royal burgh in the first instance by James III., and its charter was renewed by James V.; its government is confided to a provost, four bailies, a treasurer, a dean of guild, and fifteen councillors: it is a representative burgh, and unites with Tain, Wick, Dornoch, Dingwall and Cromarty, in returning one member to parliament. The town-hall is a convenient building, supported on pillars forming a piazza in front; the first story is divided into apartments for a common prison, the second for an assembly hall, with a large room adjoining for the courts of justice, and the highest is set apart as a freemasons' lodge. The quarter sessions are held on the first Wednesdays of January, April, July and October; the sheriff's court is open every Thursday during the sitting of the supreme court, and oftener when necessary; and the burgh and dean of guild courts hold their sittings at requisite and convenient intervals. The sheriff's and commissary courts are held in Kirkwall, the synod of Orkney holds its meetings here, and the sheriff's small debts court is held four times a year.

The harbour of Kirkwall is safe and commodious; it has two excellent piers, and the outer bay affords good anchorage ground; altogether the situation of the place is well adapted for the resort of shipping. The number of vessels belonging to Kirkwall and Stromness is fifty-five, of the aggregate burthen of 3,779 tons. The town is supplied with coals principally from Newcastle. The making of kelp occupies many persons, and the trade in timber is of some consequence. There are two branch banking establishments; and an hotel (Kemp's), a very respectable and comfortable house. Kirkwall sustains several educational establishments, including an academy or grammar school, and others on charitable foundation or instituted by societies. The Orkney hospital, a remedial institution, was founded by John Balfour of Trenby, Esq., for the relief of the sick, and as an asylum for a certain number of aged, infirm persons, and they are attended gratuitously by the faculty of Kirkwall. The Kirkwall fair at one time was famed for the extent of business and the number of merchants and others attending, from various distant places, and it has been compared to the celebrated Leipzig fair on a smaller scale. It is held on the first Tuesday after the 11th of August and continues during that week and the one succeeding,—but the business transacted is now comparatively trifling.

POST OFFICE, Victoria-street, KIRKWALL, Archibald Miller Garrioch, Post Master.—Letters to and from the SOUTH; and FINSTONE, STROMNESS and ORPHIR, arrive and are despatched daily (Sundays excepted, weather permitting.)

Letters between STRAUNSAY, SANDAY, and WESTRAY arrive and are despatched weekly, (weather permitting); and between FINSTONE and BIRSAV, HARRY and EVIE every Tuesday and Friday.

CONVEYANCE BY WATER

To the ISLES OF STROMSAY, SANDAY and WESTRAY, Vessels sail once a week, weather permitting.
To LEITH, the Leith, Aberdeen and Clyde Shipping Company's steam packet the Queen, or another vessel calling at Wick and Aberdeen weekly—William Flett, agent, to the clipper Paragon and Brinda—George Robertson, agent.

STROMNESS.

Is a burgh of barony and sea-port, 14 miles from Kirkwall, situate as that town is, on the Mainland (or Pomona Island) of the Orkneys, adjoining the sound of Hoy, opposite Græmsay island. This place, which has risen within the last century from being a fishing hamlet, composed of a few scattered huts, to a populous town, owes its increase to its admirable harbour and convenient position, by which it is rendered a place of safe resort, in these stormy seas, to vessels of all nations trading with the north of the eastern or western hemispheres. Its harbour is, indeed, a great attraction. This fine natural basin, extending from south to north more than a mile, is sheltered from the Atlantic on the west by a high ridge of moorish ground the southern extremity of which forms the north side of Hoy Sound; while its entrance is protected partly by the green island of Græmsay, which lies midway in the sound, and partly by a ness or point of land that stretches out from the westward and covers it from the force of tide and tempest in Hoy Sound. On the east side it is defended by two small islands or holms which extend along the back of it; and even beyond these, in a sort of outer harbour or roadstead, there is excellent anchorage for shipping. It was formerly no uncommon thing in the spring months to see in these havens upwards of fifty large vessels, on their way to the whale fishery in Davis's Straits and off to Greenland: they called here for the purpose of completing their complement of men, which was generally about twenty for each ship; in some years there were upwards of seven hundred men furnished from this port to Davis's Straits, besides one hundred and fifty apprentices: these are now altogether reduced to about one hundred and fifty men and boys. About five hundred men are engaged in the herring fishery, and employed by the Hudson's Bay Company, who have a resident agent. In this harbour captains may be supplied with necessaries to prosecute their voyage; and for repairs of vessels the most efficient and expeditious means are afforded by a new patent ship; to Mr. Stanger the port is indebted for this important additional accommodation: the machinery of the ship is of the most substantial description, and by its mechanical power a ship of seven hundred tons can be taken into the yard. A very extensive warehouse has been erected at the north end of the town; and there is an excellent pier, with eighteen feet water at spring tides. Boat and ship building is carried on here, and the manufacture of straw plait employs a few females. A branch of the national bank of Scotland is established here, and there are two principal inns—the 'Commercial Hotel,' is perhaps not surpassed in Scotland for its admirable arrangements as a family and commercial establishment and posting house.

Stromness is a very irregularly built town: the habitations have been erected without any regard to uniformity or arrangement, generally as near the sea as possible; some are even within flood mark, and protected by bulwarks, quays and jetties, which each individual appears to have constructed as suited his own convenience and taste. This range of buildings forms a narrow street, never exceeding twelve feet in width, and in many places much narrower; it runs in a zigzag direction, and is ill paved with flag-stones of unequal sizes, but repairs and improvements are being made in this respect on a liberal scale. Stromness is an independent burgh of barony by a charter held from the crown, granted in 1817, when the government was vested in two bailies and nine councillors. The market day is Wednesday; there is an annual fair held on the first Tuesday in September, which continues for more than a week, and is attended by tradesmen with goods from Edinburgh, Glasgow, and other places, in some respects resembling the fair at Kirkwall; there are also three cattle markets or fairs in the months of February, May and October.

THE SHETLAND ISLES,

OR ZETLAND ISLES—a group of islands, islets and rocks, situated in the Northern Ocean, about fifteen leagues north-east of the Orkneys, and forty-four west of Bergen, in Norway; lying between 50° 48' 30", and 60° 52', north latitude, and between 1° 52' and 1° 57' west longitude from London. By a statistical table of Scotland it appears that, of the eight hundred and fifty-five square miles of land in Shetland, there were, about forty years since, twenty-one thousand, eight hundred and eighty-eight acres cultivated, and five hundred and twenty-five thousand, three hundred and twelve acres of hills, mosses, &c.; or a proportion of four acres in the hundred under tillage; the proportion of the latter has however greatly increased. There are three principal islands in the group, namely, Mainland, Yell (on the north), and (still farther north-east) Unst; on the east of Yell lies Fetlar, which is the largest of the inferior islands; the lochs of which, are famous for trout, and several of the other islands abound with seals, otters, and wild fowl. The next island in point of size is Bressay; the smaller ones are Whalray, Out Skerries, Samphray, Big Island, Mickie Roe, Papa Stour, House, Barra, Trondray, besides a great number of islets, holms and skerries. The history of Shetland is so much involved in that of Orkney, as to render an enlarged notice of its early ages unnecessary. That the Romans visited the coasts of Shetland is highly probable, from the coins of that people which have been discovered—those are of Galba, Vespasian, Trajan, and Ælius Cæsar; and the remains of a small Roman camp are to be traced on the island of Fetlar. There seems to be little doubt but these islands were first inhabited by the Norwegians, the laws having been administered by 'udallers,' who acted as a sort of petty princes. In the year 875, Harold Harfager, or the 'Fair-haired,' subdued these islands, and gave them to Count Sigurd, who was the first Earl of Orkney, from whom sprang the true Scandinavian dynasty of the Earls of Orkney and Shetland—the latter country being at first too insignificant to be included in the title, although it was included in the grant. On the accession of the Zetland Isles to the Scottish crown, the laws of the former were gradually encroached upon by the oppressive endeavours of the Scotch earls to introduce feudal subjection and seigniorage, in place of the ancient udal tenures. From 1468, when a marriage was concerted between the Scottish monarch, James III, and the Princess of Denmark (when Orkney and Shetland were pledged to the royal husband), to the time when the two countries passed to the English crown, in the persons of Charles I and II, and afterwards to the Earl of Morton (who sold the estate to Sir Lawrence Dundas), nothing occurs relating to the possession of Shetland distinct from that which has been already noticed in Orkney. Of its derivative we are informed that Shetland was first named Hialtlandia—and hence arose Yeltaland; another name was Hetland, signifying 'the high' or 'lofty land'; and from this word, according to the Norwegian writers, the name of 'Shetland' or 'Zetland' was obtained.

SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The general aspect of the country is bleak and barren; and although there is but little to attract in the form of landscape, in what may be called the interior of the islands—the whole of them being destitute of wood—yet their coast scenery presents views of a highly interesting character; and the summer tourist, who may be content to leave behind him for a while the rich luxuriance of an English landscape (to which his eye has, perhaps, been long familiarised), and take a peep at nature in her more wild and romantic guise, will find, in the diversified appearance and picturesque grandeur of the coast of Shetland, ample gratification. In the summer of 1836, a fine powerful steam-packet, which was put on the Leith, Aberdeen, Caithness and Orkney station, made a few experimental trips once a fortnight to Shetland. A beautiful vessel, the 'Queen,' now plies weekly during the summer. The want of roads has been much felt by the inhabitants of Shetland, but government is now proceeding to remedy this inconvenience, by constructing roads between the principal inhabited parts; and where this means of communication does not exist, boats are called into use on the numerous fine 'voes' which penetrate far into the interior: in travelling by land, the small ponies, or 'shelties' as they are called, pursue their way across the wastes without much difficulty. The cattle of Shetland are of a very diminutive breed: a cow is said to weigh from two to three hundred weight upon an average; an ox from three to four, but seldom exceeding five hundred weight. A great abundance of poultry is kept on almost every farm, and small swine are very numerous. The sheep are very small, but produce wool of an excellent quality, which is knit into stockings, gloves and mits: the fleece, which is remarkably soft, has been wrought into stockings of so fine a texture, as to have been known to sell as high as forty shillings a pair; the common price, however, is from three to four shillings; but some may be obtained so low as six-pence, and even five-pence per pair. The precarious and scanty corn-harvest of Shetland is rarely finished until the end of October or even of November. The fuel in general use is peat, the cutting and drying of which occupies diligent attention. The highest land in these islands is Roeness Hill, which attains an elevation of one thousand, four hundred and forty-seven feet; the Hill of Foula is next in altitude, being about one thousand, three hundred feet above the level of the sea. The chief support of the Zetlander is dependent on the white-fishery—herring, cod, and ling abounding on these coasts; besides which, many men and boys are employed every season in the Davis's Straits whale fishery, in vessels fitted out in England and Scotland, who call here to complete their crews, and who reland them on their return from their perilous occupation. Several persons are also engaged in angling for the small fry of the coal-fish, or gadus carbonarius—known in Shetland by the name of 'sethe'; these swarm in myriads within the numerous creeks and sounds of this northern archipelago: they first appear in May, scarcely more than an inch long; about August they become abundant, measuring about eight inches in length; and in the early part of the following year they attain the ordinary size of the cod-fish: a profitable fishery then takes place, in deep tide-ways, under the term of 'sethes,' supplying the inhabitants with a portion of food and oil from the livers, for light and other purposes.

The Shetland Isles form twelve parochial divisions, composing two presbyteries and a synod. The only town in this portion of the northern group is Lerwick—besides it, there are only a few villages and hamlets on the shores. The islands now pay their proportion of the land-tax, and in every other respect have become subject to British laws; they are represented in parliament (as already noticed) in connexion with the Orkneys, to which sheriffdom they belong.

LERWICK, SCALLOWAY AND THEIR VICINAGES.

LERWICK, the principal town in Shetland, is (by steam navigation) 272 miles from Edinburgh, 166 from Peterhead (Aberdeenshire), 126 from Wick, and 95 from Kirkwall; situated on the east coast of Mainland, or largest island of the group. It bears the name of the bay on whose margin it is built; and that, in its turn, derives its name from a long, narrow inlet on the opposite shore of the island of Bressay, called Lera-voe and remarkable for its extensive deposit of clay and mud; a projecting point at the entrance to Lera-voe is called Lera-ness; and the whole bay, including the roadstead of Bressay sound, is named Lerwick, which signifies the 'bay of clay' or 'mud'—compounded of Icelandic leir, Danish leer (clay, mud), and Sulo Gothic vrik, Danish vig, vig (an arm of the sea, an anchorage). The site of the town, comprising a lunated segment of the sea-shore of nearly half a mile in length, and becoming gradually more elevated as it recedes from the coast-line, presents the appearance of a perfect amphitheatre, and, when viewed from the opposite anchorage, the effect is singularly picturesque. The principal street extends through the whole length of the town, following the curvature of the sea-shore; and numerous lanes or closes, constructed at right angles with it, lead to a spacious road, or half-formed street, on the eminence above the town. The houses are built of a species of grey sandstone which abounds in the immediate vicinity, and which is both of considerable beauty and great durability; many of them are handsome mansions, and in general they are far superior to those of the sister town of Kirkwall, in Orkney; but here, as in Kirkwall, the houses (with the exception of those very recently erected) seem to have dropped by accident into their respective localities—their owners having apparently being indifferent whether fronts or backs, gables or corners, were planted towards the street; in several places, also, the buildings project so far into the main street, that there is scarcely room for a wheel-carriage to pass: it is gratifying, however, to perceive, and it is creditable to the present municipal rulers of the burgh, that all the more offensive of these obstructions are in course of being removed. The principal public buildings are the town-house, Fort Charlotte, the parish and other churches, and the subscription rooms: the first of these is an old structure, containing a hall for the meeting of the commissioners of supply (also used as a masonic lodge). Fort Charlotte stands on a rocky eminence at the northern extremity of the town; its guns command the whole range of the anchorage, from the south to the north entrance of the harbour. It was originally built in the reign of Charles II, but having been dismantled and allowed to fall into a state of dilapidation, it was rebuilt in 1781, and then received its present name in honour of the consort of George III. It is a handsome specimen of military architecture, and is said to be of strength sufficient to protect the town against a small squadron of frigates; at present a bombardier has charge of the works and stores. In a part of the barracks is held the sheriff's court, and a part also is used as the county gaol.

The parish church stands above the town, towards its southern extremity; it is a substantial building with a Doric front of hewn stone; but, in consequence of the flatness of its roof and the want of a spire, its external appearance is somewhat ponderous: internally, however, it is both tastefully and commodiously fitted up. The free church, situated contiguously, is a handsome modern building, neatly fitted up. There are several other places of worship—substantial and commodious structures, of which a list is appended with their ministers. The subscription rooms, which are in the centre of the town, and occupy the site of the old church, besides various smaller apartments, contains three rooms of thirty feet by twenty, two of which are occupied as school-rooms, and the other is a public reading-room or news-room, where respectable stangers have the privilege of reading newspapers, and other publications.

Lerwick is a burgh of barony, having its municipal government vested in two bailies and nine councillors, with a separate board of police, all of whom are elected by the burgesses. A bailie court is held every Monday, and more frequently if occasion requires, for settling small debt cases, and for taking cognizance of police offences; the sheriff-court sits every Thursday, except during the recess; and the justices of the peace, the commissioners of supply, and the provincial synod of Shetland, also hold their meetings in Lerwick. The trade of this town is much more extensive than the amount of its population would indicate: there are shops in almost all the houses on both sides of the principal street; and the mercantile business which is transacted, in some of the establishments here, would be considered important in many a city in the kingdom. Almost the whole produce of Shetland, consisting of salted fish, beef, oil, butter, and hosiery, passes to market through the merchants of Lerwick; and, in like manner, by them are imported nearly all the groceries, spirits, and manufactured goods used throughout the islands. Lerwick registers about seventy vessels in the port, of the aggregate burthen of about 2,300 tons. Four schooners, having comfortable accommodations for passengers, are steadily employed in the coasting-trade between Lerwick and Leith; a mail-packet plies weekly between the former places during the summer months, touching at Aberdeen, Wick and Kirkwall. The harbour of Lerwick (or Bressay sound, as it is frequently called), is one of the most spacious, secure and commodious havens in the British empire: it is bounded on the east by the island of Bressay, and on the west by Mainland, having an entrance from the south, and another from the north; its extent may be inferred from the fact that, on more than one occasion, a fleet of upwards of ninety sail of war-ships has anchored in it, and found ample space for getting under weigh. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland is in operation here, and there is a very excellent hotel the arrangements of which offer the best accommodation either for private families or the commercial visitor.

SCALLOWAY is a sea-port village in the parish of Tingwall, eight miles from Lerwick; situated on the north side of a fine bay on the west side of Mainland. Anciently this was the capital of Shetland; but in proportion as Lerwick has increased in importance, Scalloway has retrograded. Near the village are the ruins of Scallow castle, erected in 1600 by Patrick Stewart, the tyrannical Earl of Orkney and Shetland, whilst in amiable contrast, stands the hospitable residence of Gideon Scott, Esq. the principal heritor. The inhabitants chiefly subsist by the herring fishery; and for facilitating the pursuit of this branch a large quay and extensive warehouses, coo-p-rage, &c. have been erected: in the spring of the year 'haaf' fishing for cod and ling is also successfully resorted to. The men of Scalloway are of a very fearless character and frequently put to sea in such boisterous and stormy weather as would deter the most experienced and intrepid seamen of other quarters: they are also a very industrious and persevering race; some of them have feud ground and are erecting neat houses for themselves.

The parish church stands three miles from the village, at the head of a fine fresh-water loch; but to obviate partially this inconvenience the Rev. John Turnbull, the respected minister, has erected at his own expense a neat chapel of ease in the village. On the west shore is a spring of very excellent water; the quantity discharged is constant and abundant, and is uninfluenced either by wet or dry seasons: it is covered by the sea at high water. Not far distant is 'Gallows Hill,' so called from its having formerly being the place of execution for criminals; the last who suffered on the spot are said to have been two unfortunate females, who fell a sacrifice to ignorance and superstition, in the seventeenth century, for the alleged crime of witchcraft.

POST OFFICE, LERWICK, William Duncan, Post Master.—A packet from Aberdeen, bringing letters from all parts, arrives every Sunday, and departs on Monday during summer and occasionally in winter according to the weather.

PEEBLES-SHIRE.

OR TWEED-DALE, a county in the southern part of Scotland, is bounded on the north and north-east by Edinburghshire, on the east and south-east by Selkirkshire, on the south by Dumfriesshire, and on the west by the county of Lanark, for almost the whole extent of its western border. In length, from its southern border, to its extreme northern apex, it measures full thirty miles; from west to east, including the parts on the latter boundary that mingle with Selkirkshire, its breadth is upwards of twenty miles, whilst in other parts it varies from ten to fifteen miles. Its form is exceedingly irregular, and the contents of its area have been variously computed. About three hundred and thirty-eight square miles, or two hundred and sixteen thousand, three hundred and twenty acres, may be taken as the nearest estimate of its superficies; the government returns of 1841, state the area of square miles to be three hundred and nineteen. According to a statement made in 1821, it appears that, of three hundred and twelve square miles, there were twenty-seven thousand acres in cultivation, and of hills, mosses and moors there were one hundred and seventy-seven thousand, one hundred and sixty acres.

NAME AND EARLY HISTORY.—The shire derives its present title from the name of the county town, and Tweedale, or Tweed-dale, from being the district in which the Tweed has its source, and the vale through which it pursues its course to the east. The Gadenii tribe of Britons, who inhabited this secluded territory on the Tweed, have left innumerable traces of their residence, demonstrated in the names of places, druidic and warlike remains, and sepulchral tumuli. The Romans were the first people who broke in upon the British aborigines in the district: after the abdication of the Roman power, the Gadenii naturally associated with the kindred Britons of Strathclyde; and the descendants of those early settlers continued here throughout the Pictish period, and until the fortune of the Scottish kings prevailed in 974. From the epoch of the migration of the Strathclyde Britons, in the ninth century, the Scoto-Irish intermingled with the remaining Britons on the Upper Tweed. The next and last class of intruders on the district was the Anglo-Saxons from Lothian, who ultimately prevailed, and finally established a permanent settlement in the shire: one of the chiefs of this people, called Eadulph, settled in the vale of Edleston water, to which, with the village, he communicated his name; in this manner those of Saxon lineage founded the families of rank in Peebles-shire. At different times the county suffered in a small degree from the incursions of marauders from the English side of the borders, a circumstance, which had the effect of keeping the people long in the exercise and possession of warlike weapons. At Philiphaugh, some of the heads of the best families fell, or were taken prisoners, fighting on the side of royalty: but in the insurrection of 1679, in the west of Scotland, which was ended in the battle of Rothwell Bridge, there were not a dozen persons natives of Tweedale. Since these stirring events, neither the county nor its inhabitants have been in any way prominent in the scenes of history.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The county is an uninterrupted series of hill and mountain ranges, so close upon each other that there is scarcely to be found a plain of moderate dimensions in the district, and not one of any kind unless upon the margin of the Tweed or its tributaries. Notwithstanding the attempts made by several individuals to encourage new and better modes of agriculture, it is certain that till within the last sixty years the management of arable farms was in a deplorably low condition; but, within the last forty years, particularly, draining, ploughing and planting have been carried on most effectually, and the general features of the country highly improved. The sides and summits of the hills are, at the present time, here and there clothed with exuberant plantations; and the great vale of the district, and its minor valleys, are now well cultivated, enclosed and divided: rich arable fields have taken the place of unproductive swamps, and are rapidly advancing up the sides of the hills. THE ELEVATIONS, for so small a county, are very numerous, and some of them are of considerable altitude; the following are the most conspicuous in height above the level of the sea:—Hartfield 2,916 feet; Broad-Law, 2,850; Dollar-Law, 2,840; Scrape, 2,560; Gums-Cleugh, 2,200; Dundroich, Pyketstane and Hell's-Cleugh, each 2,100; Cardon, 2,000; Cairn Hill, 1,800; Broughton Heights, 1,483, and Meikle, 1,480. It appears that, twenty-five years ago, the amount of stock in the shire was—1,126 horses, 5,060 cattle, and 112,800 sheep: since that period the numbers have greatly increased. Little can be said of the minerals of the county. At the north-east extremity of the shire, coal is found, but at too great a distance to be of advantage to the general population; the county is in the same predicament as to freestone, and the houses are nearly all built of blue whinstone. At Stobo there is a valuable quarry of blue slate; limestone and marl are plentiful, and ironstone is found in some parts of the district. Peebles-shire is singularly devoid of manufactures of almost every description: such a circumstance, which has scarcely a parallel in any other county in Scotland, is the more remarkable when it is considered what a superiority the district possesses in the purity and fall of its waters, which make it altogether a most advantageous site for the establishment of paper and spinning mills, as well as general manufactories.

RIVERS AND LAKES.—The principal river is the Tweed, distinguished as the fourth of Scottish streams: the upper sources of this beautiful water are found in the parish of Tweedsmuir, in this county; it is enriched by many tributaries, and, after passing the ancient town of Berwick, falls into the German Ocean. The other rivers are the Lyne, the Leithen and the Manow, all of which are subsidiary to the Tweed—and the Leggett, which runs into St. Mary's Loch, in Selkirkshire. In the rivers and small lakes there are abundance of salmon and trout, and a lake called the 'West Water Loch' is noted for the quantity of eels with which it swarms.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—When the country began to be divided into sheriffdoms, about the twelfth century, Tweed-dale was put under the jurisdiction of two sheriffs, of whom one was settled at Traquair, the other at Peebles. Peebles-shire from its connexion with the ancient kingdom of Strathclyde, became naturally a part of the diocese of Glasgow, in which it continued till the dissolution of Episcopacy. The shire now comprises fourteen parishes, and two parts of parishes: it contains one royal burgh—PEEBLES, but possesses no representative burgh; the county at large, however, returns one member to the imperial parliament.

INNERLEITHEN AND TRAQUAIR.

INNERLEITHEN (or Inverleithen), is a parish and village—the latter respectable and pleasant, is 23 miles s. from Edinburgh, 16 n.w. from Selkirk, 12 w. from Galashiels, and 6 e. from Peebles, situated near the mouth of the Leithen, within a quarter of a mile of the left bank of the Tweed, and environed on the east and west by high and partly wooden hills. Upon the Leithen are several large woollen manufactories, the powerful machinery of which is propelled by the stream, and the works employ a considerable number of hands. The celebrity and some of the prosperity of the village, are derived from the number of visitors, that resort hither to a salubrious mineral spring, possessing properties similar in effect to the waters of Harrogate. The well here has been found eminently beneficial in cases of scrofulous disorders, inflammations of the eyes, and various diseases originating in impurity of the blood. The spring is much frequented in the summer, particularly by families from Edinburgh, for whose accommodation a number of substantial houses have been built, forming a neat small street, along the public road, with a variety of houses behind, let as private furnished lodgings. A well-house was erected in 1826, containing subscription reading rooms, which are supplied with newspapers, and a select library; and there is an excellent public library, and a savings' bank. The village which, in other respects, has been improving of late years, is now well lighted with gas. Additional celebrity has been imparted to this place by Sir Walter Scott, in the publication of his novel called 'St. Ronan's Well,' of which this spot is supposed to be the scene. An excellent inn here has adopted the title of the novel. Not many years since an association was instituted, styled the 'St. Ronan's Border Club': it is composed of a great number of gentlemen connected with all parts of the country, under whose auspices is held an annual festival for the exhibition of olympic and border games, and gymnastic exercises. The day of competition is usually in August.

The places of worship are established and free churches—one of each, a presbyterian chapel and another for independents. There are schools in connexion with the churches.

TRAQUAIR is a parish on the south bank of the Tweed, and watered also by the river Quair; it lies opposite to Innerleithen, with which a communication has been opened by means of a wooden bridge thrown over the Tweed. The general appearance of the parish is mountainous, Gumsleugh and Minchmoor, lofty eminences, lying on the road to Selkirk, are both in this parish. The old mansion house of Traquair is delightfully situated on the banks of the Tweed, where that river and the Quair unite; and on the side of the hill overlooking the lawn is 'the Bush aboon Traquair,' (the subject of the celebrated ballad) pointed out by a few birch trees, the remains of a thicket or arbour, once the seat of pastoral love.

POST OFFICE, INNERLEITHEN, Walter Kenwick, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from PEEBLES, by foot-post), daily at a quarter past twelve, noon, and are despatched thereto at eight in the morning.

LINTON, NEWLANDS, NOBLEHOUSE, ROMANNO, CARLOPS, DOLPHINGTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LINTON, or (WEST LINTON) as it is sometimes called, to distinguish it from East Linton, in Haddingtonshire, is a parish and village—the latter, which is irregularly built, and without the attractions or interest of trade or manufactures, is 16 miles S.S.W. from Edinburgh, 14 N.W. from Peebles, and 11 N.N.E. from Biggar; situated at the conflux of the Lyne and Tweed rivers. Besides these streams, the parish is watered by the North Esk; and although the greater part of the district is hilly, yet it is fertile and famed for its excellent sheep pasturage, and the village has long been noted for its large sheep markets in June. A church of the establishment, and one for a congregation of united presbyterians, are the places of worship, Linton confers the title of baron upon the family of Traquair

NEWLANDS is a parish lying between Linton and Edlestone, watered by the Lyne and a small tributary stream, called the Tarth. The surface is diversified with hill and dale, and the hills are mostly green without heath. Trees thrive in every part of the parish, and the greater part is enclosed by hedge rows and fences. The parish church, a small but neat edifice, is situated on the left bank of the Lyne water; and at the confluence of that stream with the Tarth stand the ruins of Drochil castle, once a large structure partly erected by the Regent Morton, and left un-

PEEBLES,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF EDLESTON, BROUGHTON, GLENHOLM, KILBUCHO, DRUMMELZIER, KIRKURD, LYNE AND MEGGIT, MANOR, SKIRLING, STOBO, TWEEDSMUIR, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PEEBLES is an ancient royal burgh, the capital of its county and parish, and the seat of a presbytery; 22 miles s. from Edinburgh, the same distance w. by n. from Selkirk, 54 n. n. e. from Dumfries, and 47 e. by s. from Glasgow. It is situate in the centre of its parish, on a beautiful and large plain, having the Tweed running along its southern side, and the Peebles (or Edleston) water along its northern limit; surrounded by an amphitheatre of hills, and its vicinage is adorned by numerous thriving plantations and elegant mansions. Amongst the latter, King's Meadow, Kerfield, Venlaw, and Rossetta are the most conspicuous as modern seats. Sir John Hay Bart., of Hayston and King's Meadows, who is principal proprietor of the parish, has thrown over the Tweed, in a romantic glen about a mile below the town, an elegant wire bridge, which is much admired. The name of this town has been spelt several ways, at different periods—as Peblys, Pebilis, and Peeblis—and the present orthography is of no older date than the last century.

For a long period Peebles has consisted of two towns, respectively called New and Old: the former occupies the ridge of a peninsula projected westward along the northern side of the Edleston before mentioned, over which is a bridge forming a communication with the old town, which lies on the face of sloping ground. The Edleston water, by a bend round the head of the peninsula, falls into the Tweed, over which there is another bridge, of five arches, lately widened and greatly improved. The town is neat and clean, and the streets and principal shops are lighted with gas by a joint-stock company. Of the public buildings, independent of those for divine worship, the most conspicuous either in respect to magnitude or architectural prominence are the county and town halls, in which assemblies and other meetings are held; the 'Tontine Hotel'—an admirably regulated house; and the public schools. As a town profiting by manufactures or external trade, Peebles takes a station inferior to many towns of less magnitude, and not so happily favoured by situation. Formerly the manufacture of woollens and serges was carried on here to some extent, and at the beginning of the present century that of fine cotton cloths was introduced; but these branches have gone to decay, and at present the town cannot boast of any staple manufacture. There are mills for grinding flour and meal, propelled by water from the Tweed; two breweries and the same number of tanneries, and two principal inns. A branch of the British Linen Company's Bank has been in operation here for several years, and more recently have been opened a branch of the City of Glasgow Bank, and a Savings' Bank. Agencies for several insurance offices are established here of the first character; and some of the shops for drapery, &c., are handsome and well-furnished.

It is not satisfactorily ascertained at what period Peebles was created a royal burgh: Alexander III was a munificent patron of it, and its original charter is supposed to have been bestowed by that monarch; succeeding kings recognized its rights to the distinction, among whom was James VI, whose charter granted to the burgesses an extensive range of landed property and right of common in different parts, nearly the whole of which has been lost to the inhabitants. The government is vested in a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, eleven councillors, and one deacon of the weavers—the burghal corporation thus consisting of seventeen members. A sheriff's court for the county, and a sheriff's small-debt court are held weekly on Tuesday during certain months of the year; general meetings of the commissioners of supply, road trustees and freeholders of the shire take place here in the months of April and September, and the meetings of Lieutenantacy as occasion requires. The Royal Company of Archers, or King's Body-guard for Scotland, come to Peebles from Edinburgh annually, attired in the ancient and elegant dress of the bowmen of Scotland, to shoot for the old established prize of a silver arrow, given by the burgh to the most successful marksman.

The places of worship are for those of the established church; the free church, episcopalians, united presbyterians and Roman catholics—the last-named handsomely decorated and fitted up at the expense of the Earl of Traquair. The free church is a neat Gothic building; and the episcopal chapel is finished in a superior style and embellished with a beautiful window, of stained glass. There are several friendly societies, a public library and news room, and several excellent schools both public and private; for the latter this town has been long and deservedly celebrated, with respect both to the method of instruction and the salubrity of their situation. The ruins of two ancient churches are still extant; one which was dedicated to Saint Mary—the other built by Alexander III. in the middle of the thirteenth century, and dedicated to the Holy Cross and Saint Nicholas; the same monarch erected, likewise, a house contiguous for himself, which continued a royal residence until the accession of James VI. to the throne of England. Among the objects in the town and neighbourhood which generally attract attention is Nidpath Castle, a noble ruin, looking down upon the town and the Tweed from a romantic glen, about a mile distant to the west; the building is a massive tower, and, with its interesting site and localities, is the delight of the draughtsman. Half a mile to the east of the town, on a hill called 'Janet's Brae,' may be discerned the traces of two ancient British camps. The market is held on Tuesday; and the fairs on the second Tuesday of January, the first Tuesday of March (for hiring servants); the second Wednesday of May, and the first Tuesday after the 18th of July, (for wool); the Tuesday next before the 24th of August, the Wednesday before the 12th of September, the second Tuesday of October, and the Tuesday before the 12th of December.

EDLESTON (or Eddlestone) is a parish and village—the latter four miles north from Peebles, situated on both sides of the Edleston water, which takes its rise from various springs on the north and north-east boundaries, and at Cowey's Linn forms a cascade of thirty-five feet. The South Esk has also its source out of a small lake within two miles of the village—Anciently the kirk and its small hamlet stood among the hills to the east, where some vestiges of them still survive the depredations of time. The church of the present village is a modern building with a school attached.

BROUGHTON, GLENHOLM and KILBUCHO are incorporated and contiguous parishes, agricultural and pastoral. The village of Broughton stands on the road from Edinburgh to Dumfries, and from Peebles to Biggar, and is remarkable for its neatness: it was rebuilt by the late James Dickson, Esq., of Kilbucho, in the English fashion. There is a church of the establishment belonging to the united parishes.

DRUMMELZIER (pronounced Drumellyer) is a parish in the south-western part of the county, lying on the east bank of the Tweed—where also stands Drummelzier Castle, formerly a seat of the once powerful family of Tweedie. It is surrounded by some beautiful grounds, and is the last of a chain of fortresses, placed on the banks of the Tweed, which are seen every two or three miles in pursuing the course of the stream. The parish church stands on the Powsail rivulet a little way above its junction with the Tweed.

KIRKURD parish lies on the western confines of the county, and is bounded on the north by the Tarh, a tributary of the Tweed. From the first named river the land rises in finely cultivated and enclosed grounds, and then becomes hilly, with eminences richly clad in thriving plantations. The ancient church of Kirkurd, belonged at an early period to the bishops of Glasgow, one of whom gave it to the hospital of Soltra, the property of which charitable institution it remained, until transferred to the hospital of Trinity Church, Edinburgh.

LYNE and MEGGET are two parishes ecclesiastically united though not adjacent to each other. Lyne lies on the left bank of the stream of that name, while Megget is situated within the southern border of the county, near the head of Elbick and Yarrow. It is a bleak, hilly and pastoral district, intersected by the small stream Megget water, which falls into Saint Mary's Loch.

MANOR parish is bounded by Peebles on the north, and Megget on the south, and its northern extremity abuts on the Tweed. The district is the vale of the Manor water, which rises in its southern hilly quarter and falls into the Tweed about two miles above Peebles. The parish formerly belonged to the rector of Peebles, and is supposed to derive its name from being the Manor of that churchman. Several curiosities exist in this locality—amongst these the remains of a Roman camp; a tower raised on an eminence, supposed to have been erected as a watch-tower in early troublous times; and a huge upright stone, of great age, perforated with many holes. But the greatest attraction is perhaps the cottage once inhabited by the late David Ritchie, a deformed and eccentric dwarf, from whom, it is said, Sir Walter Scott drew the fictitious character of the 'Black Dwarf,' in his novel of that name. The cottage is situated in the vale near the public road at the farmstead, called Woodhouse.

SKIRLING is a small parish and village—the latter 25 miles from Edinburgh, and  $2\frac{1}{2}$  n. w. from Broughton; situated on the road from the city named to Leadhills. The parish is bounded on the north-east by Kirkurd, on the east by Broughton, on the south by Kilbucho, and on the west by Biggar. It extends about four miles in length from north to south, having a general breadth of one and a half; with a hilly surface, but green and fertile, and well cultivated. It is noted for three large fairs, held on the first Tuesday after the 26th of May (new style); the first Wednesday of June (old style), and the 4th September (old style).

STOBO is a generally well-cultivated and planted parish in the western part of the county, lying for the most part on the left bank of the Tweed, and extending about six miles in length by four in breadth. The greater part of the parish is hilly and of a pastoral character; but adjacent to the Tweed and the Lyne the land is well-cultivated and some of it finely planted—the latter character of improvement especially in the grounds surrounding Stobo Castle, a modern and beautiful edifice, situated a short distance from the parish church, within view of the Tweed. Within the parish are extensive slate quarries; their produce is of a fine dark blue colour, and much of it is used in Edinburgh, besides the home district, for roofing houses.

TWEEDSMUIR, about the middle of the seventeenth century, formed part of the parish of Drummelzier—when it was erected into a separate parish. It lies in the south-western corner of the county, with Lanarkshire on its western border. There are several ancient and rude strongholds in the parish—some of them dignified by the name of 'Castles,' but having few features of the fortress character. Within the bounds of the parish the river Tweed is augmented by the streams of the Fruid and Talla.

PERTHSHIRE.

THIS is one of the most extensive counties in Scotland, lying nearly in the centre of the kingdom, whose great northern and southern divisions it may be said in some measure to connect. It is bounded on the east by the county of Forfar; on the south-east by the counties of Kinross and Fife—from the latter county it is cut off for a considerable distance by the Firth of Tay; further on the south its boundaries are Stirlingshire and the small county of Clackmannan, which latter it embraces on two sides; on the south-west Dumbarton touches it for a short distance; on the west it is bounded by Argyleshire; and on the north-west and north by Inverness-shire. The figure of the county is very irregular, being intruded upon by other counties in some quarters, and having many indentations and projections in other parts; but for these circumstances, its form would be nearly that of a perfect circle. From the Firth of Forth at Culross, on the extreme south, to the Forest of Athol, at the source of the Tilt, on the north, it measures sixty-eight miles; and from Meikle on the east, to Argyleshire on the west, about seventy-seven miles. The contents of the area of this county have been variously estimated; we find one authority computing its superficies at two thousand five hundred and eighty-eight square miles of land, and fifty of lakes; and another (perhaps the most correct), at two thousand eight hundred and thirty square miles of land, and thirty-three of water. About twelve or fifteen years ago, the number of acres cultivated did not exceed six hundred thousand.

EARLY HISTORY.—The monuments of antiquity which exist in Perthshire are sufficiently numerous to afford a field of curious investigation. Lying northward of the Roman wall, this shire was the theatre of the last struggle for independence which the inhabitants of the low country of Scotland made against the arms of their skilful and then invincible oppressors: the final and most distinguished battle fought by the Britons was that against Agricola, under a leader to whom the Romans have given the name of Galgacus. One of the roads formed by the invaders, passing along the district of Strathearn towards Perth, may still be traced, and also from Perth, along Strathmore, to the extremity of the county; the remains of several encampments, likewise, are at this day observable, particularly one at Ardoch, in the parish of Muthill, the largest and most conspicuous in Scotland. This shire also possesses antiquarian remains of a later age and history, in ruined towers and religious structures, the district having once been the residence of a number of powerful chiefs, and of a large body of churchmen. Before the reformation, and during the domination of episcopacy, Perthshire formed the ample diocese of a bishop whose seat was at Dunkeld, as well as another bishopric at Dumblane.

SOIL, SURFACE, and CLIMATE.—Perthshire may be considered the Yorkshire of Scotland: like that immense county, it is subdivided into districts, which, previous to the jurisdictions established in 1748, were stewartries under the power of different great landed proprietors; the names of these various districts (or feudalities) are Monteith, Gowrie, Perth Proper, Strathearn, Stormont, Breadalbane, Rannoch, Balquhider, and Athol. Little attention, however, is now paid to these divisions, and the county is arranged more naturally under the two extensive denominations of Highland and Lowland, the range of Grampians forming the line of demarkation. Eighteen parishes belong to the Highland portion, while that of the Lowland comprises fifty-eight. The soil of Perthshire comprehends all the varieties known in Scotland—the carse and loamy being prevalent on the banks of the rivers, and the sandy and tillable classes on the sides of the hills; in many places are extensive mosses, particularly in Monteith district. Within the last ninety years there has been a great deal of planting in Perthshire, greatly to the amelioration of the climate and the advantage of the agriculturist. His Grace the late Duke of Athol exerted himself most beneficially in the improvement of the roads of the county, which have latterly been brought into excellent condition. During the progress of the last seventy years, a prodigious and most gratifying change has been effected in the agriculture of Perthshire, the low parts of which now vie, in rural cultivation, wealth and beauty, with any district in Scotland; the upper portion of the county is still devoted to the pasturage of sheep and cattle, which are mostly driven southward for sale and consumption. The mountains of greatest altitude above the level of the sea, in Perthshire, are—Ben Lawers, 4,015; Ben More, 3,903; Ben Glao, 3,724; Schiallion, 3,564; Ben Derig, 3,550; Ben-Ardianach, 3,500; Ben Ledi, 3,009; Ben Venue, 3,000; Ben Chonzie, 2,922; Farragon, 2,584; Ben Achally, 1,800; Birnam Hill (mentioned in Shakspeare's play of 'Macbeth'), 1,560; Turleum, 1,400; Blair, 1,300; King's Seat, 1,196; Lochtown Hill, 1,172; Kinpurnie, 1,151; Beingloe, 1,040; Dunsinane (whereon was a strong hold of Macbeth, twelve miles from Birnam Hill), 1,024; Kinnoul, 700; & Barry, 688.

PRODUCE and MANUFACTURES.—The subject of the Mineralogy of Perthshire affords sufficient materials to excite and to reward the curiosity and research of the scientific student of the works of nature; but, in a commercial or economical point of view, its minerals are of no great importance. At Culross, upon the Forth, coal has been wrought for ages; but from its situation, it is of little advantage to this county. Limestone rocks are found in a variety of localities, both in the high and the low country; but the use of lime is greatly impeded from the want of proper fuel for burning it—peat, which is the fuel of all the inland districts, being a weak and ineffectual agent in the process of calcination. Marble, of a superior quality, is worked near Glentilt; beds of fire-clay have been discovered near Culross; and in that neighbourhood, on the Devon, their is abundance of ironstone. About Callander that species of rock called breccia, or, more familiarly, 'plum-pudding stone,' is not uncommon; and here also, as in other parts, are various kinds of slate. A chain of sandstone runs from Gartree to the vicinity of Crieff; upon the Tay is one of the most celebrated stone-quarries in this country; the principal stone of which the Grampians consist is granite. Perthshire abounds with game of nearly every description, though the large species is now considerably diminished in numbers: the red deer, or stag, may be said to inhabit the forests and mountain glades in the most perfect state of nature and wildness; it is cautious in the extreme, and singularly jealous of the human form, eluding with wonderful effect the wiles of the sportsman. During the sojourn of Her Majesty and Prince Albert, with the Marquess of Breadalbane, the Prince enjoyed the sport of deer-stalking with all the excitement of a sportsman. A variety of other game are also inhabitants of these wilds; among the rest, the roe, a much more familiar animal than the stag—appearing, even in summer, in the woodlands and plantations of the valleys, down to the habitable places. In regard to its natural features, Perth is esteemed a county of first-rate interest. From its inland situation, Perthshire of course does not comprise any combination of marine and mountain scenery, which form the great attraction of the West Highlands; yet, as it abounds in inland lakes, and possesses rising grounds of as grand a character as that district, it is in no respect inferior as the object of 'a tour in search of the picturesque and beautiful,' while its charming plains may be said to form an additional attraction. The principal pursuit of industry, in the towns and villages of Perthshire, is the weaving of linen goods, chiefly of coarse fabrics; in connexion with this branch of manufacture, flax spinning mills and a considerable number of bleach fields are established. The manufactures of the county are not, however, wholly confined to that of linen: ginghams and pulicates are produced at Perth, and cotton spinning works are in constant operation at Stanley (in Auchtergaven) and Doune; the woollen manufacture is carried on to a limited extent, in two or three places in the shire; and considerable distilleries and breweries are found in several towns and villages.

RIVERS, LAKES AND RAILWAYS.—Like all elevated countries, Perthshire abounds with extensive lakes and rivers, which occupy valleys lying between lofty mountains. The chief running waters are the Tay, the Earn, the Garry, the Bran, the Almond, the Teath, the Allan, the Dochart, the Tummell, the Bruar, the Erich, the Ardlie, the Shee, and the Isla—besides innumerable third and fourth rate rivers, and streamlets of all sizes. The Forth, from rising in Stirlingshire, is not considered a Perthshire river, though it flows along a large portion of its south-west quarter. The chief lakes of the county, are Loch Katrine, Loch Achray, Loch Ard, Loch Voil, Loch Lubnaig, Loch Dochart, and Loch Earn—those are in the south-west part of the shire; Loch Tay, in the centre of the mountainous district; and Loch Rannoch, Loch Erich, and Loch Lydoch (the two latter in part only), in the north-west quarter; in the lower divisions there are some smaller and less important lakes. The most remarkable mineral waters as yet discovered in this county are those of Pitcaithly, near the bridge of Earn, which have been long famed for their efficacy in curing scrofula, and likewise complaints of the stomach. There are several lines of railway passing through the shire; among others, the 'Perth and Dundee,' the 'Perth Midland,' and the 'Central Perth.'

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Perthshire comprehends seventy-two entire parishes and twelve parts of parishes. The county is divided into ten districts, each under the jurisdiction of a justice of peace court, and of a body of deputy-lieutenants; it is further divided into two sheriff-substitutes—the seat of the one being Perth, the other Dumblane. The shire contains only two royal burghs, PERTH and CULROSS: the former returns one member to parliament, and the latter is a contributory burgh, joining with Stirling, Queensferry, Inverkeithing, and Dunfermline, in sending another. The shire, in common with other Scottish counties, likewise has one representative in the senate.

† The population of Perth City as returned under the Census taken in March, 1851, was—males 11,198; females, 12,599—total 23,797.

Note.—(a) Abernethy parish is partly in Fifeshire; but the entire population is entered here.

(b) The parishes of Alyth, and Coupar Angus, are partly in Forfarshire.

(c) Arngask parish is partly in the county of Fife; and partly in that of Kinross; the entire contains 750 inhabitants.

(d) The parishes of Forgandenny and Fossoway are partly in the county of Kinross; but the whole are entered here.

(e) Kippen parish is mostly, and Leccroft parish partly in Stirlingshire; the whole of the former parish contains 1,922 inhabitants; the latter 513.

(f) Logie parish is partly in the county of Clackmannan; and partly in that of Stirling; the entire contains 2,220 persons.

(g) Tulliallan is locally situate in the shire of Fife; but is properly entered here.

The total annual value of Real Property, in Perthshire; as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £555,532; and the amount assessed to the Property Tax, in 1842, to £624,273 19s. 11d.

ABERNETHY, ABERDARGIE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ABERNETHY is a parish lying partly in the county of Fife and partly in Perthshire—the village, said to have been the capital of the Pictish kingdom, in Scotland, is scattered over a considerable space of ground, 8 miles S.E. from Perth, and 14 N.W. from Cupar, in Fife; about half a mile north of the river Earn, near to its junction with the Tay. It is seated to the south of a spacious and rich agricultural dale, bounded by lofty hills which are chiefly planted with timber. Some of the houses are tolerably well-built, but the only structure deserving particular notice is a circular tower, the only one of its kind (with the exception of that at Brechin), in Scotland. It stands in an angle of the burial ground of the established church, and is about seventy-five feet high, and twenty-four feet diameter at its base. It is composed of sixty-four courses of regularly hewn stone, and contains one bell and the parish clock. The date of its erection is unknown, but tradition ascribes its origin to the Picts, who are said to have built it in one night, and that the stones of which it is constructed were removed from the distance of twelve miles, by a formed line—one man passing them on to another, until the whole work was completed. Abernethy is a burgh of barony, and its inhabitant are for the most part employed in weaving. The parish of Abernethy is bounded by the river Earn on the north, on the east by Newburgh and Abdie, and on the south by Auchtermuchty and Strathmiglo; it is between five and six miles both in breadth and length, and besides the village of its name already described, contains the small one of ABERDARGIE, situated about a mile to the west. Two fairs are held in the year—namely, on the twelfth of February and the fourth Wednesday in May.

ALYTH

ALYTH is a manufacturing town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name, which latter is mostly in this county, and extends into that of Forfar, 62 miles N. from Edinburgh, 29 N. from Perth, 15 N. by W. from Dundee, 12 W. from Forfar, 5 from Blairgowrie, and 34 from Meikle (the nearest railway station), pleasantly situated at the base of a range of hills, on the small river Alyth. The manufacture of brown linens is carried on here to a considerable extent, and there is a mill for the manufacture of woollens. It was erected into a burgh of barony by James III.; and a baron baillie court is held on the first Tuesday in every month. The parish is divided into two considerable districts by the hills of Alyth Loyal and Barry. Mount Blair, a conspicuous point of land, rises about twelve hundred feet above the level of the sea. The parish is watered by the river Isla, and several smaller streams. The southern district, lying in the strath, is about four miles long and three broad, this, as well as the tract of land towards the hills, is fertile and verdant.

The places of worship are the parish church (which has a lofty spire), a free church, and united presbyterian, episcopalian, baptist, and catholic chapels. The markets are held on the following days, on the third Tuesday in May, cattle, sheep and hiring; the second Tuesday in June, (old style), cattle and sheep; the first Tuesday in August, cattle and sheep; the first Tuesday and Wednesday in November, cattle, sheep, and hiring; the second Tuesday after the 11th of November (old style), cattle and sheep; and a fortnightly market for cattle and grain, every alternate Tuesday, from Martinmas till the end of April.

AUCHTERARDER, SMITHY-HAUGH, BLACKFORD*AND NEIGHBOURHOODS,

AUCHTERARDER is a parish, and the seat of a presbytery—the village, a considerable one, and of some consequence in manufactures, is 20 miles from Stirling and 14 from Perth; situated on the high road between the latter city and Dunee, on the south side of the river Earn (whose stream is famed for trout and salmon), and it is a station on the Scottish central railway. The village, which at one period enjoyed the distinction of a royal burgh, consists of one large street, which extends nearly a mile in length, and is famous as the place where originated the disruption in the church of Scotland, with the Rev. Robert Young, who is still resident there. The majority of the inhabitants are employed in weaving. The ruins of Kin-cardine castle, the ancient seat of the Montrose family, are in the neighbourhood, and in the occupation of Captain Grove. The road to the castle, from Auchterarder, passes between the bellows and the forge of an ingenious blacksmith named Hally. The market is held on Saturday. Fairs on the last Tuesday in March, the first Thursday after the first Tuesday in May, the Friday before the August Falkirk tryst, the Friday before the September Falkirk tryst, the Friday before the Falkirk Michaelmas tryst, and the largest on the sixth of December.

SMITHY-HAUGH is a small village, situated two miles E. from Auchterarder, on the road to Perth. It has no place of worship, but a burying ground with the ruin of an old church, part of which latter is converted into a vault for the family of James Duncan, Esq., of Damside, and a short distance hence is a mausoleum belonging to the noble family of Montrose.

The village and parish of BLACKFORD lies in the district of Montrose; the former bog situated three miles and a half west of Auchterarder, on the road from Dunee to Perth, at the extremity of the Ochil hills. The parish is watered by the Allan, from the north of which river the ground rises and forms a group of sandy hills, with a number of vast hollows, some of them round, and others extending in length, forming little valleys, through which, for the most part, run small brooks; there are also some small lakes in the district. A fair is held in the village on the 7th of October.

POST OFFICE, AUCHTERARDER, James Stewart, Post Master.—Letters from the SOUTH arrive (by rail) every morning at twenty-five minutes past three, and a quarter past ten, and are de-patched at twenty-two minutes past nine in the morning and eight minutes before two in the afternoon.

Letters from places NORTH arrive (from PERTH) every afternoon, at eighteen minutes before three and twenty minutes before eight in the evening, and are de-patched thereto at a quarter before three in the morning and seven in the evening.

Letters from BLACKFORD arrive every evening at half-past six, and from CRIEFF at seven, and are de-patched to the latter place at twenty-five minutes past three in the morning, and to BLACKFORD at half-past six.

AUCHTERGAVEN AND STANLEY.

AUCHTERGAVEN (or Auchtergovan) is a village and parish, situated on the road from Perth to Dundee. The district, which is hilly and moorish, lies on the south-west bank of the Tay, and on the south-east side of Birnam hill. The manor and ancient parish of LOGIEBRIDE is now a component part of this parish. A church of the establishment, a free church, an united presbyterian chapel, and a parochial school, are in the parish. The thriving hamlet of STANLEY, partly in the parish of Auchtergaven and partly in that of Redgorton, is situated two miles from Auchtergaven and six from Perth. The extensive cotton spinning and manufacturing establishment of Messrs. Dennistoun, Buchanan & Co. in this village, furnishes employment to nearly one thousand persons. A free church, with a school in connexion, is in the hamlet, also a parochial school. A branch from the Scottish Midland railway comes to the village. A fair for cattle is held in Auchtergaven, on the second Friday in November.

BLAIR-ATHOL AND BRIDGE OF TILT.

BLAIR-ATHOL is a small village and parish, included in the district of Athol or Athole. The word Athole signifies pleasant land, and Blair of Athole, which is the name of its principal valley, means the field or vale of Athole. The district is forty-five miles in length, and thirty in breadth, and the parish is twenty-four miles from N.E. to S.W., and twenty from N. to S. It lies on the north-west Highlands of Perth-shire, bounded on the south by Fortingall, Fosse, and Moulin, and on the north by Inverness and Aberdeenshire, and contains a large tract of highland territory, the mountains of which are almost covered with large and beautiful woods, interspersed with fertile vales, (which are in a high state of cultivation) lakes, and rivers, the principal of which are Loch Garry and Loch-Loch, the Tummel, Tilt, and Garry, all abounding with a variety of fish; a few years since, a trout weighing 22lbs. was caught in Loch Garry, being the largest of the burn kind remembered. The village is situated on the north side of Garry, 20 miles N. W.
from Dunkeld, on the Inverness road.

Within a short distance of the village is the noble old Castle of Blair, now called 'Athol House,' the ancient family residence of the Dukes of Athol. The maison is a long narrow building, three stories high, (formerly much higher) and a place of considerable strength, but was reduced in height by the attacks of the Highlanders in 1716. Blair Athol is celebrated for its noble old woods, and waterfalls; three miles to the west of the village are those of 'Bruar' whose stream makes several distinct falls, rushing through a rough perpendicular channel, the banks of which are covered with fine firs planted by the late Duke, in compliance with the request of 'Burns' in his well-known petition.

In the parish of Athol is the beautiful little village of the BRIDGE OF TILT, separated only from Blair-Athol by the water of Tilt, which is crossed by a neat bridge, that gives a prefix to the name of the place.
It consists of a single row of neat houses, with a comfortable-looking inn, and its pretty rural aspect is embellished, by the beautiful residence and grounds of J.
P. M'Inroy, Esq. The scenery around, too, is very charming, and includes Glen Tilt, the falls of Fender, &c. all combining to interest the tourist. The principal heritor of the parish is the Duke of Athol.

POST OFFICE, BLAIR-ATHOL, William Robertson. Post Master.—Letters from all parts SOUTH, arrive (from PERTH) every evening, about a quarter-past seven, and are despatched thereto about five in the morning.

Letters from all places NORTH arrive (from INVERNESS) every morning at half-past four, and are despatched thereto about eight in the evening.

WITH THE GENTRY, CLERGY, &c. OF THE PARISHES OF BENDOCHEY, KINCLAVEN, AND KINLOCH.

BLAIRGOWRIE is a parish containing the thriving little town of its name—the latter 12 miles E. from Dunkeld, 5 W. from Alyth, and the same distance north from Coupar Angus; beautifully situated on the southern slope of the range of hills which bound the valley of Strathmore on the north, and at the mouth of the pass through which the great north road to Fort George (by the Spittal of Glenshee and the Castletown of Braemar) runs; the river Erich passes close to the town, and propels the machinery of numerous flax spinning mills on a large scale on both sides of the river; and there are several linen manufactories. On the other side of the river are the villages of Old and New Rattray—which see. Blairgowrie was created a burgh of barony in the year 1634, by a charter from

Charles I. and is now governed by a baron-baillie and four councillors. A sheriff's small debt court is held for the disposal of cases not exceeding £8 6s. 8d., four times a year; the magistrates hold a monthly court, settling claims under £5; and a police court sits daily. There are two branch banking establishments, a savings' bank, and clubs for the votaries of angling, curling and quoiting.

A new church was erected in 1824, upon an elevated site, since when a handsome free church has been built; and there are besides places of worship for episcopalians, united presbyterians and Roman Catholics. Schools are connected with most of the places of worship.

Blairgowrie parish is of an irregular form, about eleven miles in length and three in breadth. It is divided into two districts by the Grampians, which rise immediately north of the village; the lower district is highly cultivated and fertile, while the upper is comparatively barren and moorish; with the exception of the banks of the river, which are good alluvial soil. The scenery in the neighbourhood of the town is very beautiful; and in the adjoining parish, about Craighill (the seat of Robert Clerk Ratray, Esq.), it is of the most romantic character, and is scarcely surpassed in any part of Scotland; the proprietor kindly permits strangers visiting the place to walk through the entire grounds. To lovers of the 'gentle art' of angling, no locality could be more suitable for enjoying this healthful and delightful amusement—there being not only excellent trout and salmon fishing in the Ericht and the Tav, the Isla and burns of Linnar and Lomty (which are all within a moderate distance of the village), but likewise capital perch and pike fishing in the several lochs in the neighbourhood; there are six of these beautiful lakes not more than four miles from Blairgowrie, all abounding with the two latter species of fish. On account of the inviting attractions around, the salubrity of the air, and the numerous lovely walks in the environs, the town is much frequented in summer by families from more crowded places, who are happy to exchange the confined atmosphere, which they usually inhale, for the fresh invigorating breezes and rural perambulations of the country. Amongst the antiquities in the vicinity, the remains of the castle of Glasclune must be noticed;

they present a strikingly picturesque ruin, situated on the precipitous bank of a narrow wooded glen, about two miles from the village. Fairs are held at Blairgowrie on the third Wednesday in March, on the 26th of May (if it falls on Wednesday—if not, on the first Wednesday after), the 23rd of July, the first Wednesday of November, the 22nd of November (or the first Tuesday after), and the Wednesday before Falkirk tryst; a market for cattle and grain is also held every fortnight, on Tuesdays, which is well attended. The annual Martinmas market, for hiring and cattle, is held on the 23rd November, except when the 23rd falls upon a Saturday, Sunday or Monday.

CLUNIE parish lies about five miles west of Blairgowrie; it includes part of the lower range of the Grampians, which are barren and covered with heather. The scenery, however, on the whole, is romantic and pleasing, presenting abundance of wood and water. The loch of Clunie is one of the most beautiful small sheets of water in the country; within it is a little island (thought to be artificial), on which stands an ancient tower, the property of the Airl family, which is supposed to have been the birth-place of the 'Admirable Crichton,' whose father, Sir Robert Crichton, lord advocate of Scotland, was then proprietor of the barony of Clunie; the tower is still in good repair, and partly furnished, though rarely occupied, but it is open to strangers desirous of visiting it. On the northern side of the lake lies the charming property of Forneth, belonging to Mr. Spied.

POST OFFICE, BLAIRGOWRIE, Robert Ayson, Post Master.—Letters from all parts South arrive every forenoon at eleven, and evening at half-past five; and are despatched at seven in the morning, and four in the afternoon.

Letters from KIRKMICHAEL and FORNETH, arrive every evening at half-past eight, and are despatched at half-past ten in the morning.

BRIDGE OF ALLAN. LECROPT, LOGIE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BRIDGE OF ALLAN—This beautifully romantic and fashionable watering place, is situate on the river Allan, about one and half miles from its confluence with the Forth, and nearly at the western extremity of the Ochil Hills. It is about three miles from Stirling, and within two hours journey from either Edinburgh or Glasgow—omnibuses from the principal hotels meeting every train. It is resorted to by persons from all parts of the kingdom, as well for pleasure as for restoration of health, on account of the mildness of the climate, the beauty of the surrounding scenery, and the fame of its mineral waters. Prior to the discovery of these springs this place was comparatively little known, and presented to the tourist the unassuming aspect of a small and quiet country hamlet, with a few whitewashed and thatched cottages, embosomed in venerable trees, together with an old mill, and an ancient public-house, offering "Entertainment for Man and Beast." Since that period things have greatly changed, and Bridge of Allan is now a large and handsome village, consisting of several rows of well-built houses, tasteful villas; various private hotels, and two public ones, which for elegance and comfort are not surpassed in Scotland; the whole being appropriated to the reception of visitors. Many new buildings are in progress of erection, and numerous improvements, including ornamental walks, fountains, &c. are projected for the accommodation and recreation of the public, by Major J. Alexander Henderson, of Westerton, on whose estate a considerable portion of the village is erected. There are several places of worship—these comprise churches of the establishment, a free church, and for united presbyterians. Among the various attractions and objects of amusement are found, billiard, and reading rooms and a library: the M<sup>r</sup>Farlane gallery of sculpture and pictures; a bowling green, a cricket ground, and several miles of good angling. The great patron of the place has also revived the ancient and interesting game of tilting at the ring—a sport much practised in the reign of James I. The West of Scotland archery and rifle club have occasional meetings here. But the chief seat of attraction is the mineral wells, situated on the Airthrey estate, the property of Lord Abercromby, and within a few minutes walk of the village: they are highly celebrated for their medicinal virtues, and have proved of great benefit to numerous invalids, who have resorted hither to use the waters, both internally and externally—for the latter invigorating purposes there are convenient baths; and the hotels before noticed are establishments admirably conducted for the reception of families and other visitors; while the walks around are beneficial auxiliaries in improving the health of the invalid. Among the business establishments besides the inns, are large bleach works, a paper manufactory, a spinning mill, and the usual trades found in a small country town.

The Bridge of Allan connects the parishes of LECROPT and LOGIE—the former lies partly on the county of Perth, and partly on that of Stirling, at the confluence of the Teith and Allan, and is celebrated for the beauty of scenery. Logie parish is situated on the Forth, at a part where the counties of Perth, Stirling, and Clackmannan meet. In this parish stands the tall and desolate ruin of Kambus-Kenneth Abbey, founded by David I., in 1147, and in former ages a pile of great magnitude.

POST OFFICE, BRIDGE OF ALLAN, Charles Rutherford, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive every morning at a quarter before eight, and afternoon at a quarter before four; and are despatched at five minutes past nine in the morning and half-past six in the evening.

CALLANDER,

ABERFOYLE, BALQUHIDDER, LOCHEARN-HEAD, PORT OF MENTEITH & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CALLANDER is a modern and neat village and parish—the former 52 miles n.w. from Edinburgh, 40 s.w. from Perth, 35 n. from Glasgow, 16 n.w. from Stirling, 8 n.w. from Doune, and 6 n. from Thornhill; situated in a beautiful valley, on both sides of the Teith, which river is here crossed by a bridge of three arches; and the houses are disposed in regular plan, and covered with blue slates. The church, a modern erection, with a spire, is a handsome building, and an ornament to the village. The scenery around Callander is uncommonly beautiful: immediately above the village is a peculiarly lovely spot, formed by the junction of two little rivers, issuing respectively from Loch Lubnaig and Loch Vennacher, which when united form the Teith. Callander may be reckoned the threshold of the Highlands in this quarter. A mile west of the village is the pass of Leny, which affords access to a delightful range of mountain prospect; the bridge of Brucklin is another fine point in the scenery directly surrounding Callander; and the ride to Loch Katrine and the Trossachs (classic scenes), about ten miles from the village, is extremely fine. The parish extends from the banks of the Teith to the Grampians; it is sixteen miles in length, by a breadth of ten. The low grounds are arable and fertile, but the upper country is wild and heathy. Callander has four annual fairs, namely, the 21st of March, 16th of May (old style), first Thursday of December (old style), and the third Tuesday of July.

ABERFOYLE, a parish (and the name of a celebrated pass or long valley between the Highlands and Lowlands), is remarkable for its picturesque scenery, its fine lakes and numerous streams, and the marked direction taken by the Grampians through the lower part of it; as well as for producing a great quantity of rare plants, suited to reward the researches of the botanist. The village or 'Clachan' of Aberfoyle is the scene of some fictions in the novel of 'Rob Roy.' At the head of the valley or pass lies Loch Ard, a bright and placid basin, embedded in surrounding woods, over which rises the gracefully towering form of Ben Lomond, one of whose summit platforms ascends upwards of three thousand feet above the level of the sea. The best view of this noble eminence is obtained from a wooded promontory which juts out into the water (scarcely leaving room for the road that passes on to the westward), and which, it is said, was the spot on which the skirmish occurred, described in the above novel, where Helen Macgregor makes her first appearance. Fairs are held within the parish on the first Friday of August, and the third Thursday of October.

BALQUHIDDER is a Highland parish, lying in the western extremity of the county, among the Grampians. The village is situated at the east end of Loch Voil, at the distance of thirteen miles from Callander; and is remarkable as the last residence of the famous Rob Roy, before mentioned, whose grave is pointed out in the churchyard. The parish is altogether mountainous and pastoral, and, from the number of acclivities composing its sides, has obtained the popular appellation of the 'Braes of Balquhidder,' by which it is celebrated in Scottish song and legend. It comprises several lofty mountains, among which Ben More rises in majestic superiority, and possesses many beautiful lakes, including Loch Doine, Loch Voil, part of Loch Lubnaig, and part of Loch Earn, with several others of minor celebrity. LOCHEARN-HEAD is a small hamlet in the parish of Balquhidder, deriving its name from its situation at the head of Loch Earn, a delightful elongated sheet of water, about seven miles in length by one in breadth; it is much frequented by parties in the angling season, and supplies capital sport. A considerable portion of the ancient Caledonian forest extends into this district.

PORT OF MENTEITH (or Monteith), is a parish in the ancient district of 'Monteath,' fifteen miles from Stirling. The chief object of attraction in the parish is the Loch or Lake of Monteith, a beautiful sheet of water near the centre of the district, adjoining the church and manse. It is about five miles in circumference, and is adorned by the small island of Inchmahome, where stand the fine remains of a priory or monastery founded in 1238. The ruins of the church and the cloisters, are very extensive, and exhibit many fine specimens of fine old architecture of a massive nature; the arch-way entrance is very elegant. The dormitory and vaults have been for many ages the place of sepulture of many noble and ancient families. The ruins of these interesting buildings are sequestered in overhanging woods of considerable age and growth; some of the trees are said to be upwards of three centuries old. In this vicinity on a gentle eminence, are seen the remains of what is still known as Queen Mary's Bower, where, after the disastrous battle of Pinkie, the young Princess found a safe asylum till her departure for France. The boxwood bower with its large hawthorn in the centre, where the youthful princess passed some of her happiest days, is still an object of interest to all who visit the island. In a smaller islet a short distant from Inchmahome stand the ruins of the principal residence of the Earls of Monteith.

COMRIE, SAINT FILLANS and MONIVARD.

COMRIE is a parish and village—the latter respectable and populous, is 58 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 24 w. from Perth, and 6½ w. from Crieff; situated in a beautiful and romantic valley at the foot of the Grampians, and on the north bank of the Earn, at the junction of the Lednock. Loch Earn lies at the western extremity of the parish, and from it flows the beautiful Earn, along which there is a public road through the valley of Strathearn. In the village the manufacture of woollens is carried on to a limited extent, and there are two dye works. A church of the establishment, a free church, and an united presbyterian chapel, are the places of worship—the first-mentioned is a handsome and modern building, with a spire. In the neighborhood are presented some interesting and attractive objects; the most remarkable are vestiges of Roman encampments on the plain of Dalginross, several druidical circles, and a monument of granite, seventy-two feet high, erected in 1815, to the memory of the late Lord Melville. There is also another memorial, formed of the same material, eighty feet high, to the late Sir David Baird. Five fairs are held in the year, namely, Saint Kenach's on the 22nd of March, the first Tuesday in May, the 11th of July, the 8th of November, and the 4th of December.

MONIVARD parish includes the abrogated parish of Strowan; thus united it is bounded on the north by Comrie and Mouzie, by the former also on the west, by Muthill on the south, and by Crieff on the east.
 The river Earn passes through the district from west to east; and in the neighbourhood of this stream the country is beautiful, well planted, and enclosed.
 There are several small lakes in the parish, among which Monivard lake, situated at the bottom of a fine

wood, and well stored with pike, perch, and eels, is a delightful object to passengers, and a great ornament to the pleasure grounds of Ochertyre. On the banks of the lake a fine repeating echo is produced. There are some other seats of great beauty and taste, among which 'Lawers' is the most distinguished. It was in this parish that the atrocious act of annihilation was all but carried into effect upon the clan Murray, by the clan Drummond. The latter being the most powerful, collected the men, women and children belonging to the Murray clan, into the old parish church, and set fire to it, when every soul was burned, save one, who leaped out of a window, and was caught in the arms of one of the Drummonds, who, being more humane than the rest, saved the man's life.

SAINT FILLANS is a small hamlet in the parish of Comrie, 54 miles from that village, pleasantly situated at the foot of Loch Earn, where boats are kept for the accommodation of fishing parties or other visitors, who are attracted hither by the delightful scenery of this district. In the summer season, annually, this village is the scene of an interesting festival, instituted, in 1819, by a society called the Saint Fillans Society, for the purpose of awarding prizes to successful competitors in certain national games; there is also a prize bestowed upon the best dressed Highlander, and another upon the most approved vocal performer in Gaelic. The society partakes also of a benevolent character, as it imparts aid to indigent and distressed members, widows and orphans. Great numbers of persons of respectable rank, from all parts of the Highlands, attend the meetings of this interesting association. A small neat church has recently been erected here; and there is an excellently conducted inn, affording every accommodation to gentlemen, during the fishing and shooting season.

CRIEFF.

WITH THE PARISHES OF MONZIE, FOULIS WESTER AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CRIEFF is a parish and market town—the latter 22 miles N. from Stirling, 18 W. from Perth, and 6½ E. from Comrie; situated in one of the most delightful districts of Scotland, on the southern declivity of a hill near the Grampians, having the Earn and several other streams at the bottom, backed by hills, crags and the Knock of Crieff, all of considerable altitude—the out-ports of the ancient Grampians and the bulwarks of Scottish independence. It occupies the mouth of the important pass Fendoch, where the Romans had a station, and where tradition lays the bones of Ossian, and points to a fragment of his displaced tombstone. It proceeds into the Highlands of Perthshire, having a wild mountainous region on the one side and rich soft vales on the other. Crieff is a thriving and increasing town—deriving no small advantage from the resort, in the summer months, of invalids and others, who are attracted by the beauty of the scenery and the salubrity of its situation; but it is deficient in houses fit for families of the higher class, and many are thereby prevented from taking up their abode here. Anthony Murray, Esq. of Crieff, however, offers every encouragement to persons who may be inclined to erect neat villas, he having appropriated charming sites for that purpose. Crieff has been lauded as the Montpelier of Scotland; and its salubrity of air and beauty of scenery, go far to entitle it to this appellation. It is favoured too, in being the seat of educational establishments of the first order—among these Saint Margaret's College, conducted by the Rev. Alexander Lendrum, M.A., for the education of young ladies, stands pre-eminent. Here are imparted all the branches of a sound English education and those more ornamental. The visitor is the Bi-hop of Saint Andrews.

This academy is situated at the east end of the town, commanding an extensive and delightful view of the charming vale of Strathearn, with all its varied scenery.

Among the public establishments or institutions may be named a mechanics' institute, a library, a masonic hall, and a large assembly room. The principal branches of trade carried on here are comprised in the manufacture of tartans, shawls, gala-plaids and other fabrics in woollen and cotton; brewing, tanning and grain mills. The principal mill in the manufacture of tartans, &c. before mentioned, belongs to Messrs. McEwan and Sons, who employ a considerable number of hands. Crieff boasts two excellent hotels, proverbial for their arrangements as conducive to the comfort of families and other visitants—they are called the 'Drummond Arms' and the 'Royal,' both in Saint James' square. A sheriff's small debt court is held four times a year—namely, on the first Saturday in the months of January, April, July, and October.

The places of worship are, the parish church; a spacious and neat chapel of ease; a free church, and others for united presbyterians, episcopalians, and a baptist chapel. The market, which is held on Thursday, is generally well attended. There are nine annual fairs—namely, the first Thursday of January, the third Thursday of February, the second Thursday of March, the first Thursday of April, the first and last Thursdays of June, the second Thursday of July, the third Thursday of August, and the Thursday immediately preceding Falkirk October tryst.

The parish of MONZIE, which is bounded on the south of Crieff, lies on the south side of the Grampians; it is a mountainous district, not above one-third part being arable—the remainder heath and moss; it is watered by the Almond, the Keltie and the Shaggie, upon which are several romantic cascades. The only inhabited portions of the district are two valleys, separated from each other by a ridge of hills four miles broad. The church is a modern building; near it, on the banks of a rivulet, is the parochial school.

FOULIS WESTER is a parish in the district of Strathern, and lying north of Crieff; it is intersected by the river Almond, that here flows eastward to the Tay. The parish is now under fine cultivation and well enclosed.

POST OFFICE, High-street, CRIEFF, John McIlvride, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive every morning at half-past five, and a quarter before four in the afternoon, and are despatched at half-past eight in the morning and half-past five in the evening.

DOUNE, DEANSTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DOUNE is a respectable and thriving village, in the parish of Kilmadock and district of Monteith, 44 miles W.N.W. from Edinburgh, 35 S.W. from Perth, 19 S. from Crieff, 9 N.W. from Stirling, & S.E. from Callander, 4 N. from Thornhill, and the same distance W. from Dumblane—the last-named a railway station on the Scottish Central line. It occupies a pleasant situation on the north bank of the Teith, and consists principally of three streets, radiating from a centre, where the market cross stands. Doune was formerly noted for its manufacture of Highland pistols, which branch has long become extinct. The cotton manufacture is extensively carried on at Deanston Works, by Messrs. Finlay & Co., of Glasgow; and there is established in Doune a branch of the 'Union Bank of Scotland.' A justice of peace court sits twice annually in the village for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5.

In 1826 a new parish church was erected; its style is Gothic, with a handsome tower; the interior is ornamented with a beautiful pulpit, particularly worthy of notice: for this public work the parishioners are indebted to the Earl of Moray, the patron and chief heritor of the parish, and owner of Doune Castle, once the family seat of the Earls of Monteith. The ruins of this once noble castle stand in the immediate neighbourhood, upon an elevated peninsula formed by the junction of the Ardoch water with the Teith: to judge from the massiveness and extent of its remains, the castle appears to have belonged to that first-rate order of Scottish fortresses of which those of Edinburgh, Stirling, and Dumbarton afford entire specimens. There still remains one huge square building, the walls of which are about forty feet high and ten feet thick, together with a tower which rises above the rest to the height of eighty feet, ascending proudly over the lofty trees that encompass the place, and overlooking a country eminent in beauty and fertility to whatever direction the eye may be turned. The fine old bridge which crosses the Teith a little above the castle was erected by Robert Spittal, a native of Stirling, who had amassed a fortune by being tailor to Margaret of England, widow of James IV: this princess was frequently an inhabitant of Doune Castle, and the unfortunate Mary Queen of Scots is also said to have resided some time in it. The parish of Kilmadock comprises a district of great fertility; the land upon the banks of the Forth and Teith produce abundant crops of every species of grain: from the level margin of the former river the ground rises gradually to the Grampian mountains, which form the northern boundary of the parish; the face of the country here is delightful, with many romantic features. A short distance from Doune is the small village of DEANSTON, mainly supported by the extensive cotton works before mentioned. There are six annual fairs held at Doune, namely, on the 26th January, the second Wednesday of May, the 26th July, the first Wednesday of November, the 26th of same month, and the 26th of December.

POST OFFICE, DOUNE, Robina Gibson, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive every morning at half-past five, and are despatched at six in the evening.

DUMBLANE,

OR DUNBLANE, is a small ancient city, in the parish of its name, and is the capital of the western district of Perthshire, 41 miles n.w. from Edinburgh, 33 n.e.
from Glasgow, 28 s.w. from Perth, 11 from Callanders and 3 from Doune; charmingly situated on the bank, of the river Allan, which flows through a great part of the parish, and affords excellent sport to the angler, there being a good supply of fine trout besides salmon and grilse in their season. Dumb lane is much resorted to in the summer season as a watering-place, there being an excellent mineral spring on the property of the Earl of Munnoul, in the vicinity of the town. Dumblane was formerly the see of a bishop, founded by David I; and the great object of attraction in the present day is what was once the cathedral, the choir of which is now the parish church, all the other parts of the edifice being in a state of decay. It stands on an eminence on the eastern bank of the Allan, overlooking the town, and is a large Gothic structure, with a steeple, of modern erection, one hundred and twenty-eight feet in height. That part of the town which adjoins the church, from its being composed chiefly of old dignified looking houses, exhibits the appearance of what is termed the 'Close,' or the precinct of a cathedral. The good and learned Leighton whose fame is in all the churches, was at one time bishop of Dumb lane, and bequeathed his valuable library to the clergy of the diocese; the books are kept in a suitable building called the Leightonian Library, to which the public have access on very easy terms; and a public reading room is held in a part of the building.

Dumb lane is a place of limited trade, and not con-

spacious as one of manufactures, although there are many excellent falls of water on the river. In the neighbourhood there are some establishments where woollen cloth is made, and a little weaving is carried on; in the High-street is a superior commercial and posting inn, and in the same street is a branch of the Union Bank of Scotland. This place is the residence of a sheriff substitute, and other functionaries. A sheriff's court for the recovery of small debts, and for ordinary business, is held every Wednesday, and justice of peace courts occasionally. The court-house and prison are modern buildings, convenient to their respective purposes.

The places of worship are the parish church (before noticed), a free church, two dissenting meeting-houses, and a handsome episcopal chapel. Besides the parochial school, which is both well-conducted and well-attended, there are others connected with the free and episcopal churches, one for infants, and a female school in connexion with the established church. The country to the south of the town is very beautiful, and is finely ornamented with plantations—the ride from Dumblane to Stirling is much and justly admired. The vale of Strathallan, through which flows the river Allan, lies to the north and east of the town. The fields on the banks of the river are fertile, but as the grounds approach the hills they are of a moorish character, although excellently adapted for pastoral purposes; and the dairy produce of this district is in

DUNBARNY, WITH BRIDGE OF EARN.

DUNBARNY (or Dumburny) parish is situated in the south-eastern part of the county, occupying a rich portion of Strathearn district. The church of Dunbarny is close by the village of the BRIDGE OF EARN, which latter is three miles and a half from Perth. Since the latter village has become populous and extensive, it has assumed the character of the capital of the district, while the name of the parish has sunk into comparative insignificance. Picarthey spring, near the Bridge of Earn, has been long celebrated for affording relief to those afflicted with the gravel, scurvy, &c.; and the scenery around is beautiful and romantic. The great north road passes through the district towards Perth; and the Edinburgh and Northern railway, includes in its route the Bridge of Earn, where a station for that line is established.

The parish of Dunbarny occupies the south-eastern part of Perthshire, and a pleasant part of Strathearn, north from Dron. It is bounded by the hill of Mordon (or Moncrieff), on the north and on the west by Forgandenny. It is intersected by the river Earn in various windings; the flat and rising grounds being adorned with plantations, avenues and refreshing hedge-rows. The Earn is crossed in this parish by a handsome bridge giving its name to the village above mentioned.

DUNKELD AND LITTLE DUNKELD.

DUNKELD is a small but interesting and handsome town, and burgh of barony, in the united parish of Dunkeld and Dowally; 57 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 24 E. from Kenmore, 15 N.W. from Perth, and 12 W. from Blairgowrie; delightfully situated in the bosom of an amphitheatre of hills, at the spot where the highlands and lowlands appear to meet, and where the Tay first escapes from its mountain fastnesses to the smiling land to which it contributes so much additional fertility and beauty. The town is of great antiquity, and was the capital of ancient Caledonia. The monastery of the 'Culdees' is noticed so early as 729, and is recorded to have been built by Constantine third king of the Picts. David I, in 1127, converted it into a bishopric. The first bishop of this see whose name appears prominently in history, is the heroic William Sinclair, who assumed the mitre in 1312: he built the choir, which is still entire and converted into the parish church (which in 1818, at a cost of £6,000, was very elegantly fitted up); the other parts of the cathedral have been abandoned to the operations of time and the seasons, and have sunk into a state of dilapidation: in the early part of the sixteenth century the see of Dunkeld was honoured by no less distinguished an occupant than the learned Gavin Douglas, a younger son of the Earl of Angus. The situation of the cathedral, in the midst of a fine grove on the left bank of the Tay, sequestered from the gaze of the town, must highly interest the contemplative stranger; indeed the scenery which surrounds Dunkeld has long been the subject of admiration. Nature has been bountiful to this district, and her favours were duly appreciated and skillfully assisted by the late noble proprietor, the Duke of Athol, who conducted his operations and embellishments with such consummate taste as to produce one of the most beautiful and picturesque retreats that is to be found in all Scotland, and which has long been the resort as it has been the delight of all tourists and visitors—accommodations for whom, and families, are furnished by three very extensive and superior hotels, respectively called the Birnam Hotel, the Duke of Athol's Arms Inn, and Fisher's Royal Hotel; the latter, in the occupation of Mr. Fisher, has lately undergone a thorough repair, and received considerable additions and improvements; it comprises forty bed-rooms, and several elegant sitting-rooms, besides appropriate servants' apartments. The bridge of Tay, at this place, is a magnificent structure of seven arches, the total span of which is six hundred and eighty-five feet, width twenty-seven feet, water way four hundred and forty-six feet, and its greatest height fifty-seven feet. Its erection was commenced in 1805, and completed in 1809, at a cost of upwards of £30,000; £5,000 of which was contributed by government, and the remainder disbursed by the late public-spirited nobleman. The bridge was constructed chiefly on dry land, and river afterwards turned to flow through its finely formed arches; a Mr. Brown was the architect. The view from this bridge is, in every direction, remarkably fine. Near the town is a seat of the noble family of Athol, the gardens belonging to which, the cascades, the extensive pleasure-grounds, and the lovely scenery, are most attractive objects; among these, Ossian's Hall, the rambling bridge, and several falls of the river Brian, are pointed out to the visitor. In these grounds are two very fine trees called 'the Mother Larches,' being the first grown in Britain; they were planted in 1737, and are one hundred feet high; one of them measures fifteen feet in circumference, at three feet from the ground.

The manufacture of linen goods was at one time the staple of Dunkeld, but that branch has materially declined, and there is little business now transacted in it. Productive slate-quarries are worked by a Mr. Harris, and by Messrs. Jack & Co. There are branches of the three following respectable banking establishments settled here, namely, the Central Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, and the Perth Bank. Dunkeld is a burgh of barony, and as such, governed by a baron-bailie, who is appointed by the Athol family. A justice of peace court sits once a month, and a sheriff's small debt court once a quarter, for the recovery of sums not exceeding £3 6s. 8d. For the education of youth there is an establishment called the Royal Grammar and Parochial School, and a school in connexion with the free church. The weekly market is held on Saturday, and the fairs 14th February, 5th April, and the 20th June,—should any of these fall on Saturday, Sunday or Monday, the fair takes place the following Tuesday; another is held on the second Tue-day of November (all old style.)

LITTLE DUNKELD, contrary to its distinctive appellation, is an extensive parish, lying on the west or right bank of the Tay, opposite to Dunkeld above described. The village is situated at the south end of the bridge, which carries the road across to Dunkeld. The parish forms a kind of irregular triangle, and is disposed by nature into three districts: first the district of Murthly, extending from Kinclaven to the village of Inver; the surface of this district is beautifully varied, its soil fertile, and generally well enclosed and cultivated; it is adorned by Murthly House, the seat of the Stewarts of Grandtully, and by Birnam Hill, rendered classical by Shakspeare, and rising in rude magnificence from the edge of the river. The second district extends from Inver, along the banks of the Tay to Grandtully, a space of ten miles: here the fields are level, and the whole has the appearance of an almost continued series of beautiful gardens. The third division, which is separated from the second by a hilly tract of considerable elevation, is a valley of about nine miles in length: the soil is generally of a fertile clay or loam, grey freestone and slate. The mineral productions that have been hitherto discovered in the parish, are confined to lead ore and argillaceous earth. Little Dunkeld parish is traversed by the military road from Perth to Inverness.

DUNNING, FORTEVIOT AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNNING is rather an extensive parish, containing a neat village of its name—the latter 9 miles s. w.
from Perth, and 5 E. from Auchterarder; situated near the centre of the district, on the banks of the Dunning water (a tributary of the Earn), half a mile north of the base of the Ochil range of hills, and about two miles from the river Earn. The village, which contains a number of good houses, is under the control of a baron baillie, and a justice of peace court. The places of worship are the parish and free churches, and an united presbyterian chapel. The steeple of the parish church is of very ancient date, and is supposed to be of Pictish origin. The village was burnt to the ground by the Earl of Mar's army, on the retreat from Sheriff-muir to Perth. A thorn that was planted at that time, in the centre of the ruins, is still to be seen, and from its shape, size, and appearance, it at once attracts the stranger's attention. It is recorded that at the conflagration of the village, only one house escaped (which is still standing), and that by an ingenious device on the part of its owner—a female, who, while the rest of the cottages were in flames, threw parcels of wet straw and refuse of flax on the fire within the house, which raised such a smoke round this particular dwelling, that believing it to be in a fair way of demolition, the soldiers did not molest it. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in May (old style), and on the 20th of June and 24th of October.

FORTEVIOT is a parish in the district of Strathearn, and the greater portion in the vale of Earn—the river of that name passing through it. The middle portion is beautifully wooded and enclosed, and is intersected by the May, which joins the Earn nearly opposite Dupplin Castle. The village of Forteviot, which is situated on the right bank of the last named stream, is an ancient capital of the Pictish kingdom, but nothing

now remains to mark a royal seat. At Bankhead, near Dupplin Castle, an ancient cross may be seen, and one also on the opposite height of Dromochy, both which are supposed to mark the approaches to Hally hill, where in the time of Charles I. vestiges of a palace were in existence: it was on the heights here that the battle of Dupplin was fought. The river May, before mentioned, delightfully winds through the verdant knolls of the Ochils, and thence through the picturesque grounds of Invermay, flowing on and forming in its course beautiful falls, until it becomes lost for a time in the intricate course of the Hummel-Rummel, a cataract at Mackarey Linn, that tumbles for more than thirty feet, in a perpendicular fall, into a romantic glen, the property of Major Belcher, who has done all possible to improve by art the natural beauties of this charming locality. About three hundred yards from the village is a station belonging to the Scotland Central railway; and where has been lately erected a new inn (the 'Forteviot Hotel'), which is exceedingly well conducted, in every respect for the accommodation and comfort of travellers; visitors may also enjoy the use of a pleasure boat on the river Earn, provided by the obliging proprietor.

ERROL,

WITH THE GENTRY AND CLERGY OF ABERNYTE, INCHTURE, KINNAIRD, LONGFORGAN, AND SAINT MADDOES.

ERROL, is a parish in the Carse of Gowrie, five miles and a half in length and nearly three in breadth, stretching across the Carse from the foot of the hill to the banks of the Tay. The soil is rich and fertile, and under the most productive tillage; it is also highly favourable to the growth of fruit trees. The country is intersected with small tracts of water called 'pows,' collected chiefly from the trenches opened for draining the grounds. As the tide and current in the Tay were making great encroachments, the proprietors of the land found it necessary to build strong walls to arrest their usurpation. It is recorded that this district received its name from Errol, signifying the flight of a hawk, from the circumstance of the family of Hay, who, having fought gallantly under Luncartney, received for their services, from the king, a gift of as much land in the Carse of Gowrie as a hawk flew over. This account, be it correct or merely originating in traditional legend—it is certain the noble family of Hay takes the title of Earl of Errol from the appellation of the parish; the small village named after it, is 10 miles E. from Perth, occupying a beautiful situation on a rising ground, embowered in trees, commanding a prospect of the Tay and the Carse almost as far east as Dundee. A rivulet flows past it to the Tay, and forms a small harbour at its mouth; and about a mile from the village is a station on the Dundee and Perth line of railway. The parish church is a very handsome building on a commanding site; the tower may be seen at a considerable distance; there is also a substantial and capacious free church, and two for united presbyterians. Fairs on the last Wednesday in July, and the Wednesday before the third Friday in October.

POST OFFICE, at the Railway Station, about one mile from ERROL village, William Adam, Post Master.—Letters from various places arrive (by rail) every morning at half-past four and half-past eight, and afternoon at four and six, and are despatched every morning at six and nine, and afternoon at half-past three, half-past five, and at six.

FORTINGAL.

IS a parish in the district of Breadalbane. The village, a small one, is 84 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 42
 N.W. from Perth, 15½ N.E. from Killin, 5½ S.W. from Dull, and 5 W. from Kenmore, situated on the left bank of the river Lyon, about three miles from its junction with the Tay. The parish lies in the midst of the Grampians, and is only useful for sheep pasture. Including the abolished parish of Kilchonan, it extends thirty-seven miles in length by seventeen in breadth, occupying a large tract of Highland territory in the northwest part of the county. The district abounds in lakes, rivers, and woods; the chief of the former being Loch Rannoch, about eleven miles in length, whose banks are finely wooded. Not far from the southern bank of the lake are the barracks, called Georgetown. In this district rises the Schehallion, one of the highest mountains in Scotland, where Dr.

 Maskelyne, astronomer royal, some years ago, made his observations on the powers of attraction. This parish is so wild and mountainous that, prior to the year 1745, the civil power could not reach it. It was the receptacle of the freebooters, who laid the country under that species of contribution so well known by the name of 'Black mail.' The inhabitants are now steady and industrious. Fairs are held in the village, April the 25th, August the 21st, and December the 6th.

KENMORE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

THE parish of KENMORE lies in the Highland district of Breadalbane, surrounding the large and beautiful lake, Loch Tay, which is twenty-one miles in length, varying from one to two in breadth. The waters of the lake, which seldom or never freeze, abound with salmon and other fish. The clean little village of Kenmore, with its kirk, and its white cottages, occupy a lovely eminence at the north-east end of the loch, close by the point where it opens into a river, over which is thrown a handsome bridge. The village is 80 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 40 N.W. from Perth, 24 W. from Dunkeld, 16 N.E. from Killin, and 5 E. from Fortingal. In the vale below the village are the park and castle of Taymouth, the magnificent seat of the Marquess of Bread-albane. The mansion contains a fine and valuable collection of portraits, by celebrated artists, and a choice selection of miscellaneous paintings, rendering the 'Breadalbane Gallery,' one of the best in Scotland.

 The house, some years since, was much enlarged and improved by its noble owner, and it now ranks amongst the most elegant modern castellated mansions in Scotland. This spot is a favourite point in a tour to the Highlands, and hence is much visited in summer.
 The district comprises objects both sublime and beautiful: among the former is the majestic mountain, Ben Lawers, which rises, on the north-east side of the loch, to the height of 4,015 feet. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in March, and the 2nd of November (both old style), and the 28th of June, the 26th of July, the 17th of September, and the 21st of December.

KILLIN

IS a mountainous and extensive parish in the highland district of Breadalbane—the village, a small one, is 74 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 40 N.W. from Stirling 27 W. by N. from Crieff, 22½ N. from Callander, 16 S.W. from Kenmore, and 8 from Loch Earn head, occupying a delightful and picturesque situation at the west end of the celebrated Loch Tay, and near the confluence of the rivers Lochy and Dochart, with the waters of the lake. On a small island, formed by two branches of the river, and much in the shape of a coffin, is the burial place of the M'Nab clan. On one of the trees of the island may be seen a branch, which severed from its parent stem by a storm in February, 1806, attached itself to a neighbouring tree, and is now growing with its branches downwards. A small eminence, in the neighbourhood of Killin, is pointed out as the place of sepulture of the famed highland hero Fingal. The village is noted for the picturesque beauty of its situation, and, like Kenmore, is a favourable point of tour of the central Highlands. A good commercial and family hotel affords every needful accommodation to visitors. Besides Killin, there is another village in the western part of the parish, called CLIFTON. To view the scenery of this district to advantage, the traveller is advised to take the road on the south-east side of the lake; and in passing down its banks, it is worth while to stop a little at a woody glen, where the family of Breadalbane have built a grotto opposite to a cascade, which is very well deserving of attention. This is named the Fall of Acharn, and has two or three falls in its descent. The greatest, however, is that which is opposite to the hermitage, where it suddenly precipitates itself over a projecting rock two hundred and forty feet. The hills here are mostly green, and afford good pasturage. Fairs are held on the 20th of January, the 5th of May, and the 26th of October.

POST OFFICE. William Walker, Post Master.—Letters from all parts (except KENMORE) arrive (from CRIEFF) every morning at half-past ten, and are dispatched thereto at half-past twelve noon. Letters from KENMORE arrive every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at twelve noon, and are dispatched thereto at half-past three in the afternoon of the same days.

KINCARDINE, CULROSS AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KINCARDINE is a sea-port town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Tulliallan; 22 miles S. from Perth, 15 W. from North Queensferry, 10 W. from Dunfermline, 6 W. from Torrvburn, and 5 E. from Alloa; situated in the southern detached part of the county, on the north bank of the Frith of Forth. At one period this place was called West Pans, from the salt works established in it, but these have long ceased to exist. There are two banking establishments here—the one a branch of the Glasgow Union, the other of the Commercial Bank of Scotland. About twenty ship, or part ship owners, are settled in Kincardine; there is an old established rope, canvas and sail-cloth manufactory, and a distillery in the neighbourhood. A commodious harbour and an excellent quav have been constructed, which, together with the good anchorage-ground in the Forth, render this haven an eligible refuge for vessels in distress; the harbour will admit vessels of from three hundred to four hundred tons burthen. The town is irregularly built; there are some good houses, but the streets are narrow, and upon the whole, it is a place not of prepossessing appearance. The new church, erected some years ago, is a very handsome and ornamental structure; the other places of worship are a free church and an united presbyterian chapel. The old church remains standing in the burial ground, and exhibits an interesting ruin—the steeple, however, being perfect. The principal seat in the vicinity is Tulliallan Castle, from which an extensive view of the surrounding country is commanded. A fair is held in Kincardine on the last Friday in August CULROSS is an ancient town and representative burgh, in the parish of its name, four miles from Kincardine; situated partly on the acclivity of a hill rising from the Forth, the principal street running north from the shore. It formerly carried on an extensive traffic in salt and coal, and previous to the union between the two countries, one hundred and seventy foreign vessels have been at one time in the roads, this trade is now entirely lost. The Earl of Dunsinonald erected some very extensive works for extracting tar, naphtha and volatile salt from coal; but the speculation proving unproductive it was abandoned, and the works allowed to go to ruin. The principal employment of the working class, at the present time is weaving for the Glasgow houses. Culross was erected into a royal burgh by James VI., in 1588; it has a chief magistrate, two bailies, a treasurer, with eight merchant councillors and six incorporated trades; the burgh is united with the towns of Stirling, Queensferry, Inverkeithing and Dumfermline in returning one member to parliament.

The town and its vicinity possess many objects of antiquity. In 1278, a monastery was founded, on rising ground behind the town, by Malcolm, Thane of Fife; considerable remains of this structure are yet extant. On the north side was the abbey church, which had a steeple in the centre, the latter still entire, as is also a part of the church, some years since repaired, and now used for public service by the parish. In a recess opposite the doorway is a monument of Sir George Bruce, in beautiful white marble, lying beside his lady; and along a low settle are arranged their seven children in kneeling postures. To the west of the town, on the banks of the Forth, is Castle-hill, anciently called Dunnemart Castle, meaning 'the castle near the sea;' it was the stronghold of the Macduffs, and according to tradition, was the horrible scene of the murder of Lady Macduff and her children, perpetrated by order of the ambitious and sanguinary Macbeth; the fabric is now a total ruin. Near the church is a school, endowed by the late Patrick Geddes, Esq., for twenty children of both sexes. Fairs are held on the third Tuesday of July and the third Wednesday of November.

IS an extensive parish, in the south-eastern corner of the county, adjoining Aberdeenshire on the north, and the county of Forfar on the east; it extends seventeen miles in length, by from six to seven in breadth, comprehending the whole Glenshee district, and part of that of Strathardle. On some of the hills of this district, tradition fixes the scene as that where many of the Fingalian exploits were performed. A military way from Coupar Angus to Fort George proceeds through the northern part of the parish, by the Spiritual of Glenshee. The southern quarter of the district is intersected by the Ardlie, which is crossed by a stone bridge of two arches, and a good road passes along the left bank of the river. In this part stand the parish village, and kirk, at the distance of 72 miles N. from Edinburgh, 29 N. from Perth, and 13 N.E. from Logierath

A handsome free church has been recently built which will seat five hundred persons, and there is a constabulary force in the village.

MEIGLE

IS a parish in the district of Strathmore—the village or small town—an ancient one, and the seat of a presbytery, is 61 miles N. from Edinburgh, 18 N. by E. from Perth, 13½ N.N.W. from Dundee. 9 S.S.W. from Kirriemuir, 7½ W. from Glamis, 5 N. from Coupar Angus, and 4 S. from Alyth; pleasantly situated on the bank of the Isla, about a mile from a railway station, on the Scottish Midland line. The parish is four miles and a half in length and two in breadth, is fertile and well cultivated, and, besides the Isla, is watered by the Dean, which is the northern boundary of the district. There are some beautiful seats in this part of the county, particularly Belmont Castle, the mansion of Lord Wharnclyffe, the gardens and fine plantations of which combine to render it the most delightful residence in all Strathmore. In one of the enclosures is pointed out a tumulus, where, it is said, the murderous Macbeth was deprived of his usurped power and his life in his fatal encounter with Macduff. A number of stones and monuments, supposed to be of Pictish origin, are also to be seen in this vicinity. In the church-yard of Meigle are some very old monuments, which, tradition asserts, denote the grave of Queen Vanoria, the unfaithful wife of King Arthur; the figures, which, it is said, once delineated the history of Vanoria, are so defaced and dilapidated as to render all attempts at deciphering their meaning a fruitless task. About a mile north-east of the village, at the junction of the Isla and the Dean, are the remains of a Roman camp, called Curaen, or Caerden, and noticed by General Roy in his work on the Roman antiquities of Scotland. A cattle market is held on the first Monday in every month, and fairs on the last Wednesday of June, and on the last Wednesday of October.

METHVEN, MONEDIE, REDGORTON AND TIBBERMUIR.

METHVEN is a very neat village and parish—the former six miles west from Perth; situated on the high road to Crieff, from which it is distant eleven miles. It possesses a savings' bank, a subscription library, a body of freemasons, and a friendly society, the members of which latter have erected a large building for their monthly meetings, where the masons also assemble in lodge; there is likewise an agricultural society, who hold two meetings annually, which are very respectable. The ancient church of Methven was collegiate, being founded in 1433, for a provost and several prebendaries, by Walter Stuart, Earl of Athol, one of the younger sons of Robert II. About a mile from the village is Methven Castle, (the residence of William Smythe, Esq.), distinguished in Scottish history as the place where King Robert was defeated by the English army, under the Earl of Pembroke, in 1306. In the parish is also Baigowan (or Lynedoch Cottage), delightfully situated on the banks of the Almond, a rapid stream, with many falls. But, perhaps, the most interesting object in the parish is the grave of the celebrated 'Bessy Bell and Mary Gray,' whose beauty and seclusion from the world are the subject of an admired Scottish melody. Fairs are held on the first Thursday of May and fourth Thursday in October.

The parish of MONEDIE is a small district, comprehending a square of about two miles, bounded by the parish of Auchtergaven on the north, and by that of Redgorton on the east and south. There are properly speaking no hills in the parish but only rising grounds which run northward and southward from the banks of the Shockie. Until lately Monedie was annexed to the parish of Logie Almond.

REDGORTON parish is about six miles in length by two in breadth, extending along the Tay and Almond; besides which rivers there is the Shockie stream, and several other rivulets, each propelling considerable machinery in the district through which the waters pass. It is bounded on the north by Auchtergaven and Kinclaven, on the east by Scone, on the south and south-west by Tibbermuir and Methven, and on the west by Monedie.

TIBBERMUIR (or Tippermuir) is a parish of about the same extent as Redgorton, and is a manufacturing district, having within it extensive bleachfields and print-works. The ancient castle of Huntingtower is in Tibbermuir, and is worthy of notice as being formerly the seat of the Gowrie family, and the place where James VI was sometime confined, by the Earl of Gowrie and other conspirators, in the year 1582. Tibbermuir has given its name to the first battle that was fought between the Marquess of Montrose and the covenanters, though the conflict occurred more within the parish of Aberdalgie; in this sanguinary engagement the covenanting forces were totally routed.

MUTHILL AND ARDOCH.

MUTHILL is an extensive parish lying on the borders of the Highland district, on the right bank of the Earn—the village is 19 miles N. from Stirling, 16 W. from Perth, and 3 S. from Crieff; situate on the great military road from Dumblane to Inverness by Tummel-bridge. About a mile to the westward stands Drummond Castle, the ancient seat of the noble family of Perth; it is finely seated on a rock at the head of the vale of Strathearn, and attracts the attention and admiration of every stranger from the beautiful prospect it commands; a little to the eastward of this seat is the mansion of the present representative of the family. A new church erected in 1828, a free church and an episcopal chapel are the places of worship, and connected with the churches are schools and a joint library. There is also a reading room and library,—established by Lady Willoughby D'Eresby. A portion of the industrious classes are employed in weaving, for the large manufacturing houses, by resident agents.

The principal objects of interest in the parish, particularly to the antiquary, are two Roman camps; one at Stragath—the other at ARDOCH, a hamlet six miles from Muthill; the latter being considered one of the most perfect and interesting in Britain. The area of this camp is an oblong of one hundred and forty yards by one hundred and twenty-five, within the lines; the 'general's quarter,' which is a regular square of twenty yards each side, rises above the level of the camp, and contains the foundation of a house ten yards by seven. There are two other encampments adjoining, which have a communication with each other. Many years ago, various interesting relics were brought to light from beneath these ancient fortifications, such as Roman spears, helmets, fragments of bridles, and several other articles: these lay at the house of Ardoch for a considerable period; but were all carried off by some soldiers in the Duke of Argyle's army, after the battle of Sheriffmuir in 1715, and could never be recovered.

PERTH.

THIS ancient and elegant city, a royal capital, the seat of a synod and presbytery, and the capital of the county to which it gives name, is 43 miles N. from Edinburgh, 61 N. E. from Glasgow, 22 S. W. from Dundee, and 15 S. from Dunkeld. It forms the terminus of three lines of railway—namely the 'Scottish Central'; the 'Scottish Midland'; and the 'Dundee and Perth'—the stations for the two first named are at Marshall bank, and for the third in Princes street. The city is situated at the opening of an extensive plain, nearly surrounded by picturesque hills, having in the distance a view of the sublime amphitheatre of the Grampians; and bounded on the north and south by two beautiful meadows, called the North and South Inches, the former containing one hundred acres, the latter seventy-two; both ornamented with noble trees, and watered by the Tay—one of the finest rivers in the kingdom: these Inches are for the use and recreation of the inhabitants. It is recorded that, when Agricola's army saw this delightful plain and superb river, they exclaimed, as with one voice Ecce Tiber! Ecce Campus Martius!—Behold the Tiber! Behold the field of Mars! Agricola pitched his camp in the middle of that field, on the spot where the city now stands. Till of late years the traces of a fortification, called Cromwell's Fort, were visible on the South Inch, but are now entirely obliterated, and elegant new buildings have, from time to time, been erected on part of the space it occupied. Perth for a long period held the rank of capital of Scotland, was the residence of its kings and nobles, and the seat of its parliaments. It appears this city once bore the name of St. John: at the early period when the Scots' king succeeded to the Pictish throne, the church and bridge of Perth are supposed to have been consecrated to St. John the Baptist, as the tutelary saint of that town—and consequently it progressively obtained the name of St. John's Town, but was not recognized by that name in any of the public documents of that period. Fordun in his history, remarks that he had found in some ancient writs that the town of St. John, now called Perth was priorly Bertha, the contraction being Berth or Bert; and as the letters B and P are used in the Gaelic language indiscriminately, it may naturally be presumed that the Highlanders changed the pronunciation of it to Perth; and from this circumstance, it is very probable, the present name of the place was derived—indeed, at the present time, the word Perth is pronounced by the Highlanders Peirt, or Peart.

The approach to Perth by the Edinburgh road is strikingly picturesque, and the descent to the South Inch terminates in a majestic avenue of trees, extending to the town. At the termination of a second avenue, stands the extensive penitentiary or general prison for Scotland, built by government, in 1812, for the reception of prisoners of war, considered the first specimen of this species of architecture in Scotland; these very commodious and massive buildings contained, at one time during the war, seven thousand prisoners. The city itself is large and well built; the streets are long and spacious, well paved, and gas-lighted. At the east end of Marshall place, and forming the extreme south-eastern angle of the city, stands a fine architectural ornament, the new 'water reservoir,' designed by the learned and accomplished Dr. Anderson, rector of the academy, and erected under his immediate superintendence: he also devised the scheme for the supply of pure water. In all wells sunk within or near the town, the water was strongly impregnated with salts, and consequently ill adapted for culinary purposes or cleanliness—the saline fluid flowing in much faster from the neighbouring high grounds than the soft water from the river. To obviate this, Dr. Anderson devised the plan of excavating a filtering bed, three hundred feet long, in the gravel, in the upper end of Friartown island, which, having a branch of the river flowing on either side, secretes only the water of the Tay, and produces an unlimited quantity of this indispensable element—pure, soft and limpid at all times and seasons; this is conveyed to the reservoir by means of a suction pipe, of great power, below the bed of the principal branch of the river, and thrown up into the tank by two beautiful steam-engines, each of ten-horse power. The project has been crowned with such complete success, that works upon the same principal are carried into effect in Berlin and Paris; the expense of this noble work is defrayed by an assessment on real rents above a certain amount, while the poor are supplied gratis. The public baths were erected by subscription in 1846, at a cost of £1300 and every description of bath may be used at a very low charge. Opposite the North Inch, and fronting the Tay, is an elegant row of houses called Rose-terrace; in the centre are erected the public seminaries (noticed hereafter). At the south end of Rose-terrace is a handsome range of houses forming a crescent. The range of villas on St. Leonard's bank, skirting the western boundary of the South Inch, at the summit of a gentle elevation, is particularly striking. In addition to these, the whole of the tasteful erections in King-street and King's-place, Kinnoul-street, Athol-street, Charlotte-place, and Barossa-place, have arisen within twenty-five years. Adjoining the North Inch is a bridge that crosses the Tay; this fine structure, elegant though unadorned, is built in a most substantial manner, but its narrowness admits a foot-path on one side only. Immediately adjoining the bridge is the village of Bridge-End, leading to Kinnoul Hill, whose summit at the distance of a mile and a half, can be most agreeably ascended by Montague-walk, winding through a wood about one-half the distance; the precipice of Kinnoul is above six hundred feet perpendicular, and affords an enchanting prospect. The noble river that flows along the base of this towering cliff, the hills and more concentrated objects in the foreground, and the grandeur of the mountainous perspective, present a panorama that is rarely excelled. Near the eastern declivity of this remarkable cliff stands the beautiful Castle of Kinfauns, in the centre of the delightful demesne of the same name, so richly embellished by the late Lord Gray. On the eastern bank of the river, about two miles from Perth, stands Scane Palace: the original edifice of such historical notoriety, has been replaced by a magnificent pile of building, it is surrounded by extensive pleasure grounds, highly embellished with wood and water. At a short distance from the palace is the chapel, also rebuilt; it is environed by majestic trees, which gives it an air of pleasing solemnity. Before the reign of King James, the coronation of the kings of Scotland was solemnized in the palace of Scane. The Earl of Mansfield is hereditary keeper of this palace, and proprietor of the spacious park and grounds that surround it; the noble family reside here, and hold great state, for nearly six months in the year; it is visited by great numbers of strangers and tourists, and access can be obtained at all times, by a written order (which is readily granted), on application to the noble earl's agent, Mr. Condie, Blackfriars House, Perth.

The public buildings in Perth, especially those of late erection, display much taste and spirit. The most prominent is the county-rooms. This structure, completed after a design by Mr. Smirke, is situated at the extreme end of South-street, on the banks of the Tay and forms a noble object when viewed from the opposite side of the river; the front, which faces the water, is embellished by an elegant portico in the centre, and twelve massive fluted columns, which support a beautiful pediment. From the entrance hall a passage leads off to the county hall, which is a noble room, sixty-eight by forty feet, and occupies the south wing; the centre contains the spacious justiciary hall, of semi-circular form, and a gallery which will hold one thousand persons. The remainder of the building, on the same floor, includes the sheriff's court and room, his clerk's office, and an arched fire-proof room where the records of the town are deposited; above is a capacious ball and card room, &c., &c. Directly in the rear of this edifice the new gaol is erected, divided into two prisons—the northern side for felons, and the other for debtors: from the gaoler's house, fronting the interior of the entrance gate, a subterraneous passage leads to the prisoner's bar in the justice hall. Near £30,000, was expended in the erection of these buildings. The city hall, at the west end of Saint John's church, erected by the town council, is one of the most capacious public rooms in Scotland—seating

Manufactures, &c.—There are several manufactories for hosiery, and various fabrics of cotton and linen. Brewing, tanning, iron founding, and rope and sail making are other branches of industry and skill; whilst the coal, corn and timber trades employ aggregately a considerable capital. There are six banking establishments settled in Perth, exclusive of one for savings. The Central Bank of Scotland (one of the six), occupies a very ornamental building in Saint John-street. The hotels here are of a highly respectable character; the 'Salutation,' in South-street; the 'Temperance,' in George-street; and the 'King's Arms,' in High-street, are conspicuously well conducted. Vessels of two hundred tons burthen, owing to skilful dredging, can now deliver and receive cargoes at the harbour; and steam-boats pass regularly between Perth and Dundee. The number of vessels belonging to the port is about seventy-five; the total burthen, perhaps, between six thousand and seven thousand tons.

The government of the city is vested in a lord provost (who is also a sheriff and coroner), four bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and nineteen councillors; the council thus consists of twenty-six members—all of whom (with the exception of the dean of guild) are, since the passing of the Burgh Reform Bill, in 1832, elected by the suffrages of the £10. constituency of the four elective wards; the dean of guild is a member of council ex-officio, and is chosen by the guild in corporation; the lord provost and magistrates are elected by the councillors, and returned from amongst themselves. The public officers of the municipality are two city clerks, a procurator fiscal, and a city chamberlain. The town council sits every Tuesday, and the council meets on the first Monday in every month. A sheriff's court is held every Wednesday and Friday during session; and two courts at least, in each vacation. The police of the city is under the charge of a superintendent: and the quiet and good order of the town is materially promoted by the power the magistrates have of summary punishment for petty offences; the expense of this establishment is defrayed from the collection and sale of the public manure, and five per cent. chargeable on all rents above £3. per annum. Perth was constituted a royal burgh, with a confirmation of all its former privileges, in the year 1210, by William the Lion; James VI. accepted the municipal office of provost of the city, and partook, at the Cross, of the festivities which were prepared for that extraordinary occasion.

Edifices for Religion.—The churches in Perth, with some few exceptions, do not display any striking external beauties. Saint John's church is a very ancient structure, and supposed to be one of the first churches built with stone in this country; it was originally erected in the form of a cross, and called the Kirk of the Holy Cross of Saint John's Town; although it has been almost entirely remodelled by alterations at different periods, yet enough of the ancient part remains to testify that it once was a very fine edifice; some extensive repairs have greatly improved its exterior appearance in later times: on the outside of the tower are affixed a set of musical bells, covered by a kind of portico, and a singularly looking spire surmounts the whole. The great reformer, Knox, thundered forth his declamations from this venerable old pile when denouncing the corruptions of the establishment. At the extremity of High-street, in Methven-street, stands Saint Paul's church, a more modern and not inelegant structure of stone, with a steeple surmounted by a spire. Saint Leonard's church, a very handsome structure, designed by Mr. Mackenzie, a local architect, was erected in King-street, in 1835—the expense defrayed by joint-stock shares and private subscriptions; it is incorporated with the establishment. The episcopal or English church, in Princes-street; it is small, but the interior is neat, and furnished with an excellent organ. The free church have numerous edifices, as have also the different bodies of presbyterian dissenters; and there is also a Gaelic church. The baptists have a commodious chapel in South-street, and the Roman catholics a large one in Melville-street; the latter has a fine organ.

The city of Perth contains several charitable and well supported institutions for the sick and destitute, among these are the County and City Infirmary, the Lunatic Asylum, the Perth Dispensary, a Society for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, the Destitute Sick Society, &c.; and several male and female schools for the education of poor children, all of which are conducted on the most liberal and enlightened principles. The Infirmary is a commanding structure, situated in the County-place: the first stone was laid by Lord Kinnaird, in 1836; the late Marquess of Breadalbane, and Dr. Brown, of Perth, left liberal bequests towards this institution, which donations have been augmented by one from the present Marquess of Breadalbane, of £400; adjoining the infirmary is the Dispensary. The Lunatic Asylum building is situated on an eminence of considerable elevation, on the north-west side of the hill of Kinnoull; the order of architecture is in the Grecian Doric—it was originally constructed to contain one hundred patients, the funds for its erection being left by a Mr. Murray, a native of Perth. The accommodation in this asylum is so superior—the management so efficient—the mode of treatment and discipline of the patients so highly approved—and the success attending the exertions of the superintendent, the matron, and the physicians, so strikingly apparent—that the applications for admission, from all parts of the country, became so numerous and urgent, that it was considered necessary, in 1834, to make very extensive additions, on the same plan with the original portion of the work. Some years ago the institution was incorporated by royal charter, under the title of 'James Murray's Royal Lunatic Asylum.' The munificent bequest of the benevolent donor has been sufficient for all the erections, and a considerable sum still remains as an endowment. On the 9th of May, 1837, a few days only after the above remarks were penned, a large portion of this magnificent structure was accidentally destroyed by fire.

Many valuable institutions for literary pursuits and the encouragement of the fine arts are most respectably supported. The Antiquarian Museum possesses a considerable collection of valuable coins, medals and manuscripts, besides a great variety of natural curiosities, amongst which is a cabinet of minerals, containing upwards of twelve hundred choice specimens, tastefully and scientifically arranged. In the centre of Rose-terrace are erected the 'Public Seminars,' of fine stone, embellished with noble pillars. This institution is established on the most liberal principles; the course of education is completed in two annual sessions of ten months each, the session commencing in October and ending in July; the masters comprehend a rector for mathematics and the higher branches of education, and his assistant; a master for the modern languages, one for drawing and painting, and another for practical arithmetic and accounts. The Grammar School has also a rector, and his assistant; the fees of attendance paid by the students are very moderate. A beautiful structure has been erected near the bridge, which forms a handsome termination to George-street; it is dedicated to the memory of the late Thomas Marshall, Esq., of Glenalmond, formerly lord provost; and is a monument evincing esteem for departed worth. The form of this edifice is circular, ornamented with an elegant Ionic portico: the body of the building is surmounted by a dome, and the whole is imitative of the Pantheon at Rome; in the interior are halls for the public library, and for the museum of the literary and antiquarian society of Perth: this structure was raised by private subscription. The Exchange Coffee-room, in George-street, is of handsome exterior, and the internal accommodations are well suited for the purpose. The Freemasons' Hall is a neat and not inelegant building, in the Parliament-close, High-street; it contains a handsome spacious room, which is principally used as an auction-mart for respectable sales; it was built on the site of the old Parliament-house, in the year 1818, and is the property of the Royal Arch Lodge of Freemasons. An elegant little Theatre stands in Athol-street; the interior is fitted up with taste and neatness. On the Inches many of the citizens ardently engage in athletic sports and exercises, especially cricket, football, and the national game of golf; the Royal Perth Golfing Society has his Grace the Duke of Buccleuch as captain, and includes in its roll of members a great many of the nobility and gentry; the hall or parlour of the society is at 21 Charlotte-street. The Barracks, erected in 1795, at the west end of Athol-street, form a handsome building, originally intended to accommodate two hundred cavalry, but lately converted to the use of infantry; they will contain a full regiment.

The weekly market-day is Friday: the fairs, since the year 1822, have been altered by the magistrates and town-council, on account of the general inconvenience resulting from the days formerly appointed falling on the same days, or at the same time, with the fairs of Farkik and other places; they are now therefore held on the first Fridays in March, April, July and September; on the third Friday in October, the second Friday in December, and a sheep and wool fair the first Tuesday after Inverness wool fair; a cattle market is likewise held on the North Inch, on every Friday, from the third occurrence of that day in December, to the middle of June; and a horse market takes place on the first Friday in May.

PITLOCHRY IN MOULIN AND LOGIERAIT.

PITLOCHRY is a thriving village, in the parish of Moulin, 13 miles N.W. from Dunkeld, and about five from Logierait; situated on the banks of the Tummel, and surrounded on all sides by some of the most beautiful and varied scenery found in the highlands of Perthshire. The trade of the village is mainly confined to that of a domestic and retail character—except that the distillation of whi-ky is carried on somewhat extensively in the village and neighbourhood. The place, too, is of sufficient importance to encourage the establishment of several respectable fire and life agency offices, and two wealthy banking concerns—branches, respectively, of the 'Central Bank of Scotland,' and of the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland;' and there is, besides, a savings' bank. A justice of peace court sits here once in every third month, and three fairs are held annually—namely, on the Saturday before Amulree in May; on the Friday after Falkirk tryst, in August, for lambs; and on the third Wednesday in October (old style).

MOULIN is a large parish in the Highlands, extending towards Athol. It is intersected by the Briarachan and the Fernet, which unite within the district; and there are several lochs well stocked with trout, particularly lake Broom. The greater part of the parish is mountainous, but the vales of the streams are exceedingly beautiful. The village, which is very small, is five miles distant from Logierait; near it stand the ruins of the old castle of Moulin. In this parish is the pass of Killierankie, noted for the battle fought there in July, 1689, between King William's troops, commanded by General Mackay, and a body of highlanders under the Viscount of Dundee. There is a fair held at Moulin annually, on the first Tuesday in March.

LOGIERAIT is a parish in the northern part of the county—the village is 8 miles N. from Dunkeld, and the like distance east from Aberfeldie. It is noted for the distillation of whisky, in which branch there are several establishments in the village and its neighbourhood. The principal part of the parish lies on the point of land formed by the junction of the Tay and the Tummel, extending, along the banks of each, seven miles. Not far from the church is an eminence, which commands a prospect of the greater part of the parish, which, including the windings of the rivers, the vales and pastures, with the woodlands, in some places extending to the rivers' banks, and the distant mountains, form together one of the richest landscapes that can be imagined. A chain boat commenced crossing the Tay at Logierait in August, 1824, for the accommodation of both foot and horse passengers. A coach and four may go into this conveyance without taking the horses from the carriage. It was at Logierait that Prince Charles kept his prisoners after the battle of Prestonpaul.

RATTRAY AND NEW RATTRAY.

RATTRAY is a parish and village. The latter pleasant, but irregular in its buildings, is 58 miles n. from Perth, 13 n.e. from Dunkeld, and 4 w. from Alyth; situated on the north-eastern part of the county, and built mainly on the declivity of a hill. The principal occupation of both sexes of the inhabitants consists in the spinning of flax and weaving of coarse linens. To the south-east, on a rising ground called the Castle-hill, remain the vestiges of the ancient Castle of Rattray; and about two miles north of the village stands Craig Hall, on a rock that rises one hundred feet perpendicularly. The small but neat village of NEW RATTRAY is of modern erection; this is connected with Blairgowrie by a bridge of four arches crossing the Erich, on each bank of which river are flax spinning mills, employing a great number of persons, both male and female. The places of worship are a handsome church built in 1820, and a chapel for a secession congregation. The parish of Rattray lies on the left bank of the river Erich, and is bounded by Bendochy on the east, and on the opposite side of the river by Blairgowrie; it extends four miles in length by two in breadth; the surface is much diversified—the land on the banks of the river being arable and fertile, while the higher grounds are only suited for pasture. Fairs are held on the first Fridays in April and August.

SCONE,

WITH THE NOBILITY, GENTRY AND CLERGY IN THE PARISHES OF CARGILL, COLLACE, KINFAUNS, KILSPINDIE, AND ST. MARTINS.

SCONE is a parish lying on the left bank of the Tay, opposite the parishes of Redgorton and Perth—the village, sometimes called NEW SCONE, is about two miles n.e. from Perth, and with the palace, occupies a retiring part of the grounds which rise from the Tay, and command an outlook upon the river and the vale of Perth. This place is worthy of notice principally on account of its ancient palace, for ages the residence of the early Scottish monarchs, the place of their coronation, and the scene of many important and brilliant events. In this vicinage formerly stood an abbey also, founded by Alexander I., in the year 1114. Some historians have described Scone as the ancient capital of the Picts; it certainly, however, was the chief seat of Scottish royalty as far back as the time of Kenneth II. In the church of the abbey just mentioned was preserved the famous stone (brought from Ireland, according to some writers, by Fergus I.), which was used as the coronation-seat, and upon which all the successive Scottish kings were crowned till the calamitous days of John Balliol, when Edward I. carried it to England, where it continues to form one of the appendages to regality in Westminster Abbey; the last monarch crowned at Scone was Charles II, January 1st, 1651, when on his expedition into this kingdom. On the site of the ancient palace an elegant new edifice has been raised, as a seat of the Earl of Mansfield—pleasantly seated on an extensive lawn sloping gently to the Tay, and surrounded by large and umbrageous plantations. In this modern mansion much of the antique furniture has, with judicious taste, been preserved; in particular, a bed that belonged to James VI., and another, the hangings of which were wrought by the fair hands of Queen Mary, when a prisoner at Loch Leven: the music gallery occupies the same site as the noble old hall in which the coronations were performed; the large gallery, intended for the reception of a collection of valuable paintings, is one hundred and eighty feet long. About fifty yards from the house is an aisle of the old abbey of Scone; it contains a magnificent marble monument to a Viscount Stormont, who died upwards of two centuries ago. At a little distance farther stands the old market cross of Scone, surrounded by a wilderness of pleasure-grounds, which have usurped the station of the ancient village: it has been aptly observed, that 'there are many instances of towns losing their market crosses, but this is the only cross which has lost its town'

THORNHILL,

OR THORNHILL IN MENTEITH, is a village in the parish of Kincardine, 45 miles w. by n. from Edinburgh 39 s. w. from Perth, 5 s. from Callander, four from Doune, and three from Kippen. It consists chiefly of one street, extending nearly half a mile in length. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture, and in weaving. There are the usual domestic trades found in a country village, also a tannery. A church of the establishment, and one for the free communion are the places of worship; and the schools are a parochial and two private ones.

The parish lies in the southern quarter of the county in the 'Strath of Monteith,' it is triangular in figure, one side of which is twelve miles in length, another sixteen, and the third about seven; altogether it contains a superficies of six thousand acres, four thousand of which are carse land, lying along the Forth; the moss of Kincardine covers a considerable portion of the carse land. Adjacent to the Teith, and on the road from Stirling to Doune, is the highly ornamented and improved estate of Blair-Drummond, upon which operations of great magnitude have been successfully carried on, in reducing the quantity of superincumbent moss.

WEEM, AND DULL WITH ABERFELDIE.

WEEM is an extensive Highland parish, in the district of Breadalbane; it is so mixed up with and intersected by neighbouring parishes, that no accurate idea can be given of its extent and boundaries. The surface is mountainous and rugged; it is watered by the rivers Tay, Lyon, Lochy, and Dochart. The church of Weem is 74 miles N.N.W. from Edinburgh, 34 N.W.

from Perth, and 9 w. from Logierait. Near the church is Castle Menzies, the seat of Sir Robert Menzies, Bart.; a handsome building with lofty turrets, surrounded by fine plantations, pleasure grounds and orchards—a spot presenting a refreshing contrast to many other parts of the district.

DULL is also a large parish, and assimilated in its localities with Weem so that a just estimate of its extent cannot be arrived at; it comprehends, however, a general length of thirty miles, by a breadth of about twelve; the river Tummel bounds the district on the north-east, and the Lyon and Tay on the south, which rivers produce excellent salmon; and the lakes (of which there are fifteen, of large and small dimensions), abound with fine trout, pike and eel. The military road from Stirling to Inverness passes through the entire length of the parish. The church stands at Appin, about two miles and a half from Weem. The lofty mountain Schialion, which rises upwards of three thousand five hundred feet, is seen on the northern border, with its brow shrouded in mist. The village of Dull is situated close to the castle of Menzies before mentioned, and presents anything but an inviting aspect, the habitations being of the humblest grade.

ABERFELDIE is a thriving and neat village, partly in the parish of Dull, and partly in that of Logierait, 18 miles N.W. from Dunkeld, 9 w. from Logierait, and 6 N.E. from Kenmore; situated on the south bank of the beautiful Tay, on the great highland road, which crosses the river by a bridge, elegant and substantial of five arches, constructed by the celebrated General Wade. This part of the county is justly recognised as the centre of the most beautiful scenes on the Tay: these comprise mountain, dale and wood, and the locality is likewise attractive from its proximity to the romantic falls of Moness. The village contains several establishments of business importance—these include a branch of the 'Central Bank of Scotland,' a woollen manufactory, two hotels, well known for their excellent arrangements; and a large, handsome and admirably-conducted academy, in connexion with the free church. A sheriff's small-debt court is held here three times a year, in which claims are settled to any amount not exceeding £8 6s. 8d. Fairs are held on the first Thursday in January (old style), on the Tuesday before Kenmore March fair; on the first Tuesday in April (old style), for horses and cattle; in May, for cattle and sheep; on the Saturday next before Annulrie fair; on the first Friday in August (old style), and on the last Thursday in October (old style), for cattle and sheep.

POST OFFICE, ABERFELDIE, James Kippen, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from PERTH), very evening at a quarter past eight, and are despatched thereto at a quarter before two in the afternoon.
